Passage of the Underground and Two-Tier Railroad Bills.

Excitement Over the Tammany Tax Levies in the Senate.

Telegram from Mayor Hall Defending the Levies.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Saturday, May 8, 1869.

The excitement attending the passage of the Tammany Ring Tax Levies by the Assembly last night has not yet subsided, and a very bitter feeling exists against those recreant Republicans whose votes enabled the Democrats to carry the measure. Some material reductions were made by the Ring in several items of the levies before the evening session, in order to make it more palatable. Among others, the appropriation in the County Levy for the Court House was cut down from $2,000,000 to $800,000. There were two Democrats who refused to be whipped into the support of this big Tammany job, and they deserve the thanks of every honest man. They were JAMES B. PRAESALL, of Queens, and M. Y. TILDEN, of Columbia. The Republicans who voted for the bill excuse themselves on the plea that the New-York Tax Levies are local bills with which members residing in other parts of the State have nothing to do, and that, as the people of that City are to foot the bills for their City and County Government, they should be allowed, through the representatives whom they see fit to send here, to fix the items. If they are not satisfied with the conduct of their agents, then let them send different men to represent them. This argument appears plausible, and on the theory of republican government—that the men elected from a certain locality may be fairly presumed to represent their constituents—is unanswerable. As I have stated in previous letters, there is a growing feeling among the Republicans of the interior, as indicated by their representatives here, in favor of letting New-York City take care of herself. They say they have got tired of helping a community that won't help itself, and of enacting laws to protect them against thieves and plunderers when they continue to send none but thieves and plunderers to the Legislature. This kind of talk, which was common at the outset of the session, is still more common now; and were the Legislature to continue in session two weeks longer I have no doubt an act might be got through both Houses abolishing all the New-York Commissions, authorizing the Common Council to make up the tax levies to suit themselves, and leaving the entire control of the City Government and all its Departments in the hands of the "ring." The taxpayers of New-York City who refuse to take any part in politics and expect to have their interests taken care of by country members of the Legislature, will do well to take the hint.

THE SENATE AND THE LEVIES.

There was a caucus of Republican members of the Senate this morning, to determine what action should be taken in that body with reference to levies that were rushed through the Assembly last night. It is believed that the Republican Senators, with the exception, perhaps, of MATTOON, will stand firm in resisting all attempts to concur in the action of the Assembly. It is also asserted that two Democrats, viz.: Mr. EDWARDS, of Queens, and Mr. BANKS, of Albany, will positively vote against the Tammany Tax Levies. Mr. NICHOLS, of Erie, it is thought will also oppose them. Should this be so a Conference Committee will become necessary, in which case there will be a slim chance for an adjournment sine die to-night.

THE CENTRAL SCRIP AND CONSOLIDATED BILLS.

The Central Scrip and Consolidated bills both passed the Senate this morning. The amendment to the Scrip bill, adopted in Committee of the Whole, was stricken out, and the bill was read a third time, precisely as it passed the Assembly. JAY GOULD's amendment to the Consolidated Railroad bill, preventing any interference with an existing contract between the Erie and the Lake Shore Road, was retained.

UNDERGROUND RAILROAD RESUSCITATED.

The Senate seems to have repented of its wholesale slaughter of the innocents yesterday, and this morning a reconsideration was moved and carried on "Brown's" Underground Railroad for New-York City. The bill was then passed, but it has not received any action in the Assembly. It is the same bill, with some amendments, that passed last year, but lapsed in consequence of the corporators taking no steps to build the road. No one could be found to invest money in it last year, but capitalists may have acquired increased faith since that time.

An effort will be made to get a reconsideration of the vote by which SWAIN's Two-tier Road was defeated, and even "Arcade" has some hopes since Senators begin to talk about holding over till Wednesday.

A NEW ALBANY BRIDGE.

The bill for the construction of a new railroad bridge across the Hudson opposite the Delavan House, passed the Assembly to-day by a large majority.

THE MAYOR AND COMPTROLLER AND THE CROTON BOARD.

Mr. HITCHMAN made an attempt to get into Committee of the Whole the consideration of his amendment to the New-York City Election bill, giving the Mayor and Comptroller power to remove the Croton Board, but he failed ignominiously. That scheme may be considered killed. The Republican camp followers of Tammany say it is asking too much—even for them. S.

The Tax Levies in the Senate—A Conference Committee Appointed.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Saturday, May 8.

The Tammany ring TAX Levies were taken up in the Senate this evening, and a motion to concur in the action of the Assembly was lost. A motion to appoint a Committee of Conference was carried, when Mr. CROWLEY moved that the Committee consist of two Republicans and one Democrat. MATTOON voted with the Democrats, and the motion was lost. The President then appointed two Democrats and one Republican, Mr. CROWLEY, who declined to serve. Several other Senators were then appointed one after another to serve as the Republican member of the Committee, each of whom declined to act, the object being to throw the whole responsibility on the Democrats. Finally the President appointed Senators CREAMER, GERRY and BANKS, all Democrats. On the part of the Assembly, the Speaker appointed Messrs. LA BAU, CAMPBELL and TUTTLE, Republicans, and HITCHMAN and IRVING, Democrats. The Conference Committee met at 8 P. M., and have not made a report up to the present writing, 12 P. M. The Senate Committee being all Democrats are ready to concur in the action of the Assembly, and they take the ground that the Assembly Committee are presumed to represent their own body, and as that body passed the levies they ought to concur too. This is a smart mode of reasoning, but the Republican majority of the Assembly Committee can't see it, and as the two Committees vote separately there don't seem to be much chance of agreement. It was the intention of both Houses to adjourn sine die to-night, but the dead lock on the Tax Levy may necessitate a continuance of the session on Monday.

THE CITY RAILROADS.

The vote on the Two-tier Railroad was reconsidered in the Senate this afternoon, and passed after striking out the section authorizing the Board of Supervisors and connecting railroads to take stock in the same. BROWN's Central Underground Railroad bill, which passed the Senate this morning, was concurred in to-night by the Assembly, and is the only bill for a steam railroad in New-York City that has passed both Houses.

REPAIRS ON THE CANALS.

The Senate bill to raise money for extraordinary repairs for the canals, was announced by the Assembly so as to make the tax three-quarters of a mill on the dollar, which will raise a fund of $1,500,000, or about one-half the sum required by the Senate bill.

Mayor Hall on the Tax Levies—His Explanation of Them—The Ruse of Tax.

The following dispatch in relation to the Tax Levies was received from Mayor HALL last evening:

ALBANY, Saturday, May 8.

I desire on my personal and official responsibility to contradict the garbled and inflammatory representations in some papers respecting the magnitude of the TAX Levies. These are the facts, stated with the necessary telegraphic succinctness: The amount on the Tax Levies for this year, irrespective of bonds, issued mainly for city improvement and judgments, is in excess of last year only about $850,000. After providing for the interest on the bonds authorized by the levies, and deducting the amount provided for by tax relief bonds, the new taxes are estimated in the aggregate at about twenty-one and a half millions, and are then two millions and a half less than last year. The rate of tax will probably not exceed two and a fifteen per cent, and it was two and a sixty-ninth last year. The origin of the attack upon the tax is apparent to the watchers of political machinery. The majority of the Senate Committee desired to obtain a reputation for economy. The majority of the House Committee bid against them for the like result. Thus the finances of the City were a stake for a rural partisan gambler to win popularity at home, where opposition to the New-York Tax Levies seemingly condones during campaigns for all the other transgressions of their session.

(Signed) A. OAKEY HALL.

EUROPEAN NEWS BY MAIL.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMSHIP CITY OF LONDON.

The Inman steamship City of London, which left Liverpool April 28, and Queenstown April 29, reached this port yesterday, with two days' later news than was at hand by the China and Union.

The Moniteur announces that recently the Emperor NAPOLEON gave a private audience to Lord RICHARD GROSVENOR, as the promoter of a proposed submarine tunnel between Calais and Dover. The Moniteur does not pretend to state what passed at this interview, but it believes that His Majesty considers the tunnel scheme to be beset by difficulties; while, on the other hand, he thinks highly of the bridge over the Channel projected by M. BOUTET. He even suggested, on seeing the model of the bridge, that the number of piles on which it is to be supported should be doubled; and this can be done, it is understood, without interfering with the navigation.

A dispatch from Sir RUTHERFORD ALCOCK to the British Consul at Shanghae, on the subject of the introduction of railways and telegraphs into China, has been published. Sir RUTHERFORD says that, notwithstanding the promises made by the Burlingame Mission to Europe and America, the Central Government at Pekin shows no desire for progress according to Western ideas and desires, but, on the contrary, will not yield to the introduction of any such projects except under pressure and coercion.

AFFAIRS IN ENGLAND.

The Irish Church Once More—Further Parliamentary Discussions—Rapid National Enlightenment—Dearth of Men—The Right to Marry One's Deceased Wife's Sister—American Claims in Chancery.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Saturday, April 24, 1869.

You will not be much interested with the discussions in Parliament on the amendments to the Irish Church bill. Mr. DISRAELI is laid up with that purgatory of prosperity, the gout. The opponents of the bill storm or fret; but most of them are now showing an eager desire to get as much as possible of the proceeds. Everybody must be taken care of, with compensations and life-pensions to organists, beadles, sextons, schoolmasters. If all the amendments could be carried, Disestablishment would cost more than it come to, and instead of a surplus to give to the blind, dumb and insane, the Government would have to provide money to pay the Church for disendowment.

While this matter is going on, both Houses are earnestly at work in measures of real social benefit. Most of them originate in the Lords. The Peers have read Mr. CARLYLE's last utterance; they accept the character he has given them, and wish to do the work set down for them. They mean to root out vice and crime, and to give new heart to industry by wise legislation. Habitual criminals are to be imprisoned, and, if possible, reformed. A new Royal Commission is to examine the effects of sanitary legislation on the towns of England. Parliament will make an earnest effort to save every year the lives of hundreds of thousands of people, who now die from preventable causes—bad air, bad water, want of cleanliness, the sale of unhealthy food and poisonous liquors, the spread of contagious diseases, the care, toil and struggle of life. The death-rate of London last week was twenty-six in 1,000. Thirty towns have a higher rate than this, running to thirty or thirty-five. In no case should it go above twenty. It might be reduced to fifteen. It is not only possible, but practicable, to give the conditions of health to whole populations, so that, except in rare cases, everybody would die of old age. People should no more die prematurely of disease than boilers should explode, guns burst, or locomotives run off the track. The English Government, never so enlightened as now, never with such a sense of the responsibilities of power, is determined to give to every town in England the purest air it can have, free from smoke and all nuisances, a constant supply of pure water, clean streets, drains, and dwellings, (as far as this can be compassed,) pure and wholesome food. The Government does not see its way yet to get inside of people's houses, and compel them to keep them cleaner and air their clothes and bedrooms. Houses are examined and condemned as unfit to be inhabited, or landlords are made to cleanse and whitewash. People are fined for neglecting to have their children vaccinated, and some resist and pay the fines or go to prison, because they believe, and on high medical authority, that vaccination is a cause as well as a preventive of disease.

On the whole, there is rapid enlightenment here, and real, substantial progress; and in both Houses of Parliament and in the educated classes throughout the country an earnest desire to promote the public welfare. And in many things the English people are willing to learn of their neighbors. They had prejudices once against everything American; now, London shops are full of American inventions. As you walk along you see American cooking-stoves, churns, sewing-machines, lawn-mowers, washing-machines—but what is the use of making a catalogue? I bought yesterday, on Holborn, cans of American peaches, sweet corn and tomatoes. By the way, here is a hint for some of the Gulf parts. I have eaten fresh ripe figs, put up in cans like the peaches, at Lisbon, so delicious that my mouth waters at the memory. Again—print this direction on the peach cans, and it will quadruple the sale—open the can, pour the juice into a saucepan, with its weight of good sugar, boil and pour over the peaches. You will have one of the most delicious confections in the world, with all the flavor and aroma of the peach fully developed. Yes, the English borrow from all the world in many matters. The cry once was, "No Popery—no wooden shoes." Now Popery is getting popular, and there is a shop window on Oxford-street full of wooden shoes, highly recommended as a luxury to keep the feet dry and warm in all weathers. The English need only to import a few American managers for their large hotels, a few railway managers from somewhere to reform carriages, refreshment rooms and luggage arrangements, and they would be as perfect as can be expected of our poor humanity.

I cannot agree with those morose censors of the times who pretend that they are growing from bad to worse. I agree with Mr. DISRAELI that people are more religious than they used to be in our young days, when GEORGE IV. was King. There is a growth of honest sentiment shown in the determination to put down electoral corruption. Once a Member of Parliament had only to walk to a Government bureau and pocket from $200 to $500 for his vote on an important division. Now the suspicion of direct bribery in Parliament is never hinted. If there is a seeming of deterioration in public morals and manners, it is rather the diminution of hypocrisy—the growth of honesty or frankness. The Lord Chamberlain has administered a gentle rebuke to the short skirts at the theatres, but the Pall Mall Gazette very properly told him that the censure was much more deserved at Belgravian balls and Her Majesty's drawing-rooms. If the portraits of the most virtuous and illustrious ladies are to be seen in the most fashionable shop-windows by the side of those who are neither, it is again the engaging frankness of the national disposition. In spite of these small matters, I am sure that the real movement of the nation is upward and onward—fast tending to a higher culture and a deeper and more earnest faith.

DEARTH OF MEN.

The Daily News complains of a famine of men, and particularly young men, marrying men, and dancing men in London society. Balls are crowded with women, beautiful, accomplished, rich, with a thousand charms, and hundreds of thousands of attractions; but the men are in an overwhelmed minority. The News thinks the wines and cookery are in fault. It is not that. Men cannot afford to marry, and so keep out of the way of temptation. When a man is freshly intoxicated with wine, beauty and dancing, he is almost sure to make a fool of himself, and a declaration of some sort more or less matrimonial, to some lady. He cannot possibly remember all the foolish things he said, and there is nothing to hinder a lady and all her relations holding him in the net in which he has got entangled.

AN IMPORTANT BILL.

This reminds me that by a vote of the House of Commons, Wednesday, 99 majority, a man may marry his deceased wife's sister. The bill, now agitated for years, passed the second reading. Mr. BRIGHT made an eloquent speech in its favor. He said the objections to it were entirely of a sentimental character, and of no weight or "ecclesiastical rubbish." There was no law of nature against such marriages, and there should be no law of England. But his crowning argument was, as it is in most cases, an appeal to the example of the United States. He said:

"I am told by great authority that this bill will abolish sisters-in-law. Now, there is no man in the world would be more sorry that sisters-in-law should be abolished than I should, because I know nobody who is more indebted to sisters-in-law than I am. In the United States—in the New-England States—and there is no more instructive moral society in the Christian world than in the New-England States—these marriages are not discouraged. They take place with ordinary frequency, and I never heard any one from those States say that sisters-in-law were abolished, and that they were not the same valuable, the same admirable, and the same loveable persons in the family that they are found to be in so many families in this country."

In vain did the Solicitor-General urge in reply, that the law as it had stood upon the statute book since 1835, had always been the ecclesiastical law of the country, as it had been for 1,000 years that of all Christendom, and that its repeal was now sought by a paid agitation, got up by a few rich men who had placed themselves and their children in an uncomfortable position. He also had decided objections to the abolition of sisters-in-law, and said:

"I assert that the great majority of the women of these islands are at present unconverted to the doctrines contained in this bill; I ask this House, is it a liberal or a generous thing to legislate on a question of a marriage which affects the happiness of half one of the sexes? But it is not only a woman's question, it is also a man's question; and I object to the bill because it will destroy one of the most blessed and delightful relations which can exist between man and woman, and because it narrows the circle of that affection into which passion cannot enter; which is about the best and noblest cultivator of the highest and the purest of our nature; and to which, I venture to say, any honorable gentleman who does justice to himself and speaks candidly, will say with my right honorable friend, that he owes more than he can express."

The strongest argument for the bill urged by Mr. BRIGHT and others was perhaps in favor of applying the principle of free trade, as some expressed it, or of freedom, to marriage, forbidding none which nature does not herself, forbid, which Mr. BRIGHT said was the marriage of blood relations—but the degree of consanguinity at which he would draw the line was not specified. There was a loud expression of horror when a member expressed the apprehension that they might be called upon to sanction a man's marriage with his mother-in-law—mothers-in-law being for some reason greatly dreaded in this country. There was no special demand for a revival of the Mosaic sanction to the marriage of a woman with her deceased husband's brother. The rule does not work both ways. However, if the bill is not stopped in the Lords, when it will have the Bench of Bishops against it, sisters-in-law will be, so far as this bill can affect that object, abolished.

AMERICAN CLAIMS IN CHANCERY.

Being in the neighborhood of Lincoln's Inn on Wednesday, I visited Vice Chancellor JAMES' Court to hear the argument in one of the Chancery cases of the United States against certain persons said to have property of the late so-called, pretended, disestablished and disendowed Confederate Government. The United States has engaged, as its advocate, Sir ROUNDELL PALMER, the first lawyer in England, and a man whose character gives great weight to his advocacy of any cause. Mr. BENJAMIN, late so-called Secretary, &c., &c., manages the defence, and had pitted against Sir ROUNDELL a sharp, clever English barrister, Mr. KAY, Q. C. I went chiefly to see, and in hopes to hear Mr. BENJAMIN. He looks as if whoever else might suffer in this case, or any case, he would not. He is fat and happy. His intensely black eyes moved about with a keen, restless activity, glittering everywhere. Smiles of cunning satisfaction played over his face, which has the eager, vivacious expression of a well-to-do bird of prey. It is a very Jewish face, not of the highest type—his associate counsel was of a more refined intellectuality; but he is active, ready, vivacious, equal to any amount of work; a pleasant man for a friend, and, I should judge, not an all a pleasant man to have for an enemy. Of course the Court will take time—chancery generally does—but I got an idea that the bill had been so carefully drawn that it may defeat itself by the rule that a petitioner cannot get what he does not claim. The Vice-Chancellor, at the end of Sir ROUNDELL's plea, asked him if he would consent to an account rendered in the case. He declined to view his respected client, the United States, because it might appear that the late pretended and so forth Confederate Government was really indebted to Mr. MCRAE, and in that case the United States would have to pay the pretended Confederacy's so-called indebtedness, which would be, as was shown by Mr. KAY, an unconstitutional proceeding. But, in that case, how is Mr. Barrister BENJAMIN to get his costs? I could not see that he showed any want of assurance on that point or any other. Yesterday the pleasure of welcoming the Stars and Stripes to the British Court of Chancery some years ago. I promised them a long and costly time of it. I am told that the expenses already incurred have not only absorbed all the receipts of the consulates, but that heavy drafts have been made upon the treasury. I am friendly to the Stars and Stripes—long may they wave—but it will be expensive wearing, if they will waive further proceedings in Chancery. MONADNOCK.

THE ALABAMA CLAIMS.

Further Comments upon the Spirit of the American People—What can be Expected from Great Britain.

From the London Times, April 28.

* * * The truth appears to be that the public discussion of the Alabama claims and the many speeches that have been made on the subject have roused an interest in the international questions relating to the war; and as that too zealous orator, Mr. REVERDY JOHNSON, has irritated his countrymen, so the tone of popular opinion in America is rather against settling any differences that were left by the war. Judging by the American sentiment, it is rather a general dislike of the late Administration, of the men it employed and of the means it used, which comes to renew the irritability which existed during the war. But from such a feeling to the arrogant claims and the hostile acts which some Americans forebode is a long way. We have in Europe sufficient experience of the exaggerated importance which is attributed to the differences of Governments, and we have no reason to believe that, whatever may be the temper of a part of the populace, any Government would seriously make unreasonable and offensive demands on our own. It is said that Mr. MOTLEY is likely to be the exponent of the latest American ideas on the subject of the Alabama and the war generally. England is to make due acknowledgments and apologies for her recognition of the Confederates as belligerents. The late treaty having been rejected, Mr. MOTLEY is, as some express it, to present certain "demands;" according to others, he is to propose new negotiations; but in either case the settlement is to be accompanied by an acknowledgment that this country, in recognizing the South as belligerents, committed an unjustifiable act. We have, of course, no wish to enter upon a discussion of the question until the overtures of the new American Minister are actually made. We shall then be able to judge of their purport, and determine on what grounds the late treaty was held by the American Senate to be insufficient. But it is worth while to call to mind beforehand the present position of the two Governments. This country, having received from the American Government repeated intimations that American citizens had been injured owing to England's default during the late war, entered into negotiations with Washington, and included within the scope of the inquiry every question which had been in dispute for a number of years. The history of the negotiation is sufficiently well known to enable us to affirm that in every respect the conduct of our Government was just and conciliatory. Mr. SEWARD, who had been Secretary of State under President LINCOLN, and who understood minutely the questions at issue as well as the political history of the war, was consulted, and accepted the treaty as final. And, indeed, it would have been strange if he had not. The treaty was his own work and that of his Envoy, who, with all his unctuous speeches, was as keen a diplomatist as any country could desire. The upshot was that the Americans obtained a treaty which a good many English people thought to involve excessive concessions on our part. We consented to refer very important matters to arbitration, and the wording of the treaty was such that it was difficult to say how far those matters extended. Indeed, it may have proved that, on a rigid construction of the agreement, we had yielded a good deal more than the negotiators on our part had intended. However, we are only concerned with those abortive stipulations so far as they show that this country has actually agreed to terms extremely liberal, and perfectly satisfactory to an American Government. With the popularity or unpopularity of that Government among its own citizens we have nothing to do. President JOHNSON and Mr. SEWARD and Mr. REVERDY JOHNSON were the duly appointed representatives of the people of the United States, and with them we negotiated. It is evident that if the Americans choose to disown their own Government, and disallow its deliberate and solemn acts, it is incumbent on them to show good cause for reopening the discussion. They are bound to make it appear that their former Government was so mistaken or incapable that the terms it agreed on were wholly insufficient for the purposes of justice. It will be interesting to learn in what respects Mr. MOTLEY considers the late stipulations to have been unsatisfactory. If we are invited to discuss the question of England's right to recognize the Southern as belligerents, it will be for Her Majesty's Government to decide whether, after all that has been said and written on the subject, it is worth while to revive that controversy. There are limits beyond which national courtesy cannot pass, and when we are asked to acknowledge that an ordinary act of national sovereignty, necessary for the due security of our own commerce, was an offence against the Americans to be expiated by apologies or payments, there cannot be much use in discussion.

At all events, the position of this country is satisfactorily defined. We have simply to await the overtures, if any, which Mr. MOTLEY is instructed to make, and to consider the proofs he may adduce that the rejected treaty would have necessarily furnished an insufficient settlement. If his arguments be so cogent as to justify the rejection of a treaty, the fruit of a long and laborious negotiation, in which almost every proposal of his own Government was acceded to by ours, then, and only then, we may fairly enter into a new inquiry.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

ETHEL IN FAIRYLAND.

When Ethel awoke in Fairyland
There was much she could not understand;
Why was the sky such a marvelous blue,
And the grass never damp to the thinnest shoe?
Why in the world did the roses sing,
And the lilies flirt (such a curious thing!)
And the peach-trees talk about, and say,
"My dear, would you like some fruit to-day?"
Why did sunflit and yellow-hammer
Talk such beautiful English grammar?
Instead of wheat, there were growing crops
Of sweet-meat pears and of plum-puddings!
Why the doves which at home could only coo
(Such a monotonous thing to do!)
Came to her murmuring, "O, so nice!
Dear little girl, have some strawberry-ice."

To King Oberon's palace soon came she:
O, what a dainty King was he!
Not a bit like Harry the Eighth, although
Fond of the girls, as all men know.
He sat on a chair of oak moss antiquate,
And drank from a goblet of quite gigantic weight
(Two grains at least!) a wine whose sparkle
Would give youth to a party patriarchal.
Crush all Champagne in a single tumbler,
Yet the draught were flatter far and humbler.
Suddenly Puck, with a quaint red cap astray
On a qualmier head, popped through the tapestry:
"My liege," he cried, "I'm sorry to say
Her fairy Majesty comes this way;
And as, according to Titania,
You suffer from excessive mania,
The last time long week that the ladies spake
In these learned days such heaps of Greek!—
A safer thing it would probably be
If this little lady came with me."

Ethel thought herself in luck
To have for a comrade frolicsome Puck:
He sang as he went, this merry old elf,
And talked to the child, and grinned to himself;
As harmless a joker, as quaint a deceiver,
As ever made fun of Bottom the weaver,
Which was, if Brooke and Lepaul know,
At least three thousand years ago.

"Would you like to see our dogs, my pet?"
Then surely she was never a little girl yet,
Since girls were found in violet beds,
That did not love such quadrupeds.
And the dogs, the dogs of the fairy nation!—
Who could resist such a rare temptation?
The favorite breed, you'll understand,
In the fairy realm is the Cliffoundland.

"We fairies," quoth Puck, "have a doggy mood in me;"
And, O, the dogs were multitudinous!
There were mighty mastiffs, strong and stately,
Pets that had come from Liliput lately,
Dogs that waddled like fat old Tories,
Dogs so black that they looked like bogies,
Greyhound, otterhound, foxhound, beagle,
And biggest of all that dog most regal,
Who reigns in the sky when heat's a rager,
And known by the name of Canis Major:
But what to the child seemed quaint and queer,
Not a dog of them all had a single ear.

"O, what a shame!" cried the little one:
"All their beautiful ears are gone.
How I pitied your fairies were he drop them!"
Quoth Puck, "It distresses us, I'd whop them.
But the wicked deed, I tell you true,
Is done by little girls like you:
Into books that teach you how to spell,
Don't you put lots of dogs' ears? Well,
If you fairies, they waste so many,
How can our fairy dogs have any?"

Poor little Ethel looked very much vext;
But Puck, to cheer her, took her next
To a wider sea than hollow of emerald down
Overlooking the fairy town—
The fairy town with its crystal towers
And its tiny palaces buried in bowers,
And its fountains flashing with iced Moselle,
And other fairy liquids and the fairy swell
In their Rotten Row and their small Pall Mall,
Wasting their morning uncommonly well.

Suddenly tinkled musically
A shepherd's pipe through the grassy valley,
And Ethel saw come out from the sheep
A mighty multitude of sheep.
White in the sun their fleeces gleamed,
As down the velvet slope they streamed,
As down in ordered lines they fare,
Drawn by that blithe pipe's marvelous air,
The giant train that led the flock
Was Aries, out of the Zodiac;
Myriads on myriads came behind,
But, bless my heart! they were all of them blind.

"Now, why is this? Your sheep can't see!"
Little Ethel exclaimed; "you daren't blame me."
Said Puck, with a laugh, "'Tis a very great pity;
But boys will be naughty, and girls will be pretty;
You will have bright eyes and bunches of curls,
And the boys will be throwing sheep's eyes at the girls;
The girls, I regret to say, don't care a button—
They encourage the boys, and don't think of the mention.
Sheep's eyes flung at you may be pleasant, no doubt;
But why should our Fairyland sheep go without?"

THE STORY OF MARY SHEA.

From "Beauties of Irish Life."

Incidents of a touching and sometimes of an almost romantic character came frequently before me, in my official character, during the course of those trying years. One of these I particularly remember, and, as I had an opportunity of tracing out the tale from the commencement to the end, I will give it a separate chapter.

I have gone through much laborious work during my life, but I never went through any which pressed so hard upon my powers of endurance as the arrangements for the emigration at Kenmare. The tide of emigrants was so enormous, each pressing his individual claim, and terrified lest all the money should be exhausted before his or her name could be entered upon the emigration list, that I was compelled to station several stout men at the door of my office to keep the place clear, or the pressure of the crowd outside would absolutely have burst it in. These strong though kind-hearted porters prevented unnecessary crushing, and, having selected those from among the applicants who seemed, from their appearance, least able to wait, they let them in, one by one, to me. I carefully investigated the case of each; and, having granted or declined the application, as the merits of the case deserved, (and at that time I refused very few,) they were passed on, their names having been entered for America. The joy depicted on the countenances of those who came out, and to whom immediate emigration was promised, contrasted with the anxiety of those who were still awaiting the decision of their fate at the entrance door, was one of the most striking incidents of the scene.

I frequently passed eight hours a day at this most disagreeable and laborious work. From the very nature of the case, none came before me except those upon whom want in its severest form had fallen. A similar state of things when these creatures were pressing for admission to the workhouse, had brought many a Poor-law guardian, Government official, and many a kind-hearted Irish lady and gentleman to their graves, by violent typhus seizing them in the midst of their anxious duties.

One rule I felt compelled to make, namely, that I would speak to no applicants during the short intervals of my release from business. There was a constant but natural endeavor on the part of the peasantry to waylay me, as it were, in the private grounds of Lansdowne Lodge, thinking they might thus obtain greater time and a more quiet opportunity to state their several claims, and press their title to a share of Lord Lansdowne's bounty in the free emigration which was going forward. So difficult did I find it to prevent this constant invasion of my very few hours of privacy,—hours which were almost essential to my health as breathing to my existence,—that I found it necessary to place guards around the premises; and, as the grounds were then wholly uninclosed, and consisted chiefly of wood and underwood, through which shady walks had been cut, I found myself frequently face to face with an applicant for emigration, notwithstanding all the vigilance of my patrols.

I was walking one evening in these private pleasure-grounds, after a day of heavy labor in the office, when I thought I perceived a pair of bright eyes watching me through the leaves of some holly bushes with which the wood abounds. I stopped immediately and asked who was there.

"Oh, indeed, your honor, it's only me; and I know it's against the rules of the office to come here. But shure wasn't I waiting at the office door all day, and they wouldn't let me in, because they said I was well able to hold out still, and wasn't nigh so weak as many of the creatures that was there. And that was true enough; but then they didn't know that I had ten long miles to go home before night; and so, as some said your honor was a good man, though some said not, I thought I would just chance it for once, and may be your honor would find time to speak to a poor desolate orphan like me, even though it is against the rules."

"The desolate orphan," who now came forward and exhibited not merely her bright eyes but her full form to my view, was somewhat singular in her appearance. She had her little of the national Cult in her footgear. Her beauty was purely Spanish, of which I have seen nearly perfect specimens in Tuscist and around Kenmare: large soft eyes, with beautiful dark downy eyelashes, the mouth well formed, and cheek of classic mould; while the figure, perfect in its symmetry, is erect and active, and exhibits a lightness of step and grace of motion which can rarely be attained but by constant practice in walking over the mountains. The form which now stood before me was a beautiful specimen of this perfect Spanish type. She was clean and neat in her person, though her clothes were of the coarsest kind. Her gown, made of the light gray flannel or frieze, manufactured in the district where she lived, was crossed upon her bosom and extended up to her neck. Her hair, as black as jet, was neatly parted on her forehead, and hung in careless folds down her back. She had neither shoes nor stockings, and her dress did not come down to within seven or eight inches of her feet. She wore no shawl, which is common in the district about her neck. She held her head as erect as a startled fawn. Her hands were clasped in an attitude of wild supplication, and the symmetry of her form was enhanced by the unusual addition of a leather strap buckled around her waist, which, though neither more nor ornamental in itself, had the effect of showing off her naturally beautiful figure to the best advantage.

The moment she appeared from behind the holly bush, she commenced her oration; and, talking with a volubility and amount of action which it would be impossible to describe, her features became animated, and the blood mounted to her cheeks. In truth, I have rarely seen as beautiful and so natural a girl. I think she knew she was a beauty, and had "chanced" a little of the success of her visit upon that score, as well as well as upon my "goodness;" but there was no vanity or coquetry in her manner—she was perfectly natural and simple, and, as regards beauty, so intelligent a girl as she was could not possibly look at her reflection in one of her own dark mountain lakes and not see that she was different from her neighbors.

She had watched my countenance with the quickness of an Irish peasant during the whole time she was speaking; and, in fact, I felt sure she had prolonged her statement for that purpose, in order to form an estimate of her success, or very near line of advance according as circumstances revealed themselves. I saw this perfectly at the time; but my interest in her vivacious courage was so great, and my admiration of her beauty so impossible to conceal, that she saw in a moment, though I had not yet spoken a word, that she had won her point.

"Ah! well I knew your honor had a good and kind heart within you," said she, coming forward with graceful animation, and under cover of her well-turned flattery. "And now, maybe, I'd never have another opportunity, and oh! just listen to me till I tell you what I have to say, for mine is a sore, sore sorrow."

In a moment her whole countenance,—almost her form, had changed. Her courage—some of which she had evidently derived from her beauty, seemed to have departed. Tears filled her eyes as she looked down upon the ground, and even her form seemed to lose many inches of its height. I could scarcely have thought that the same human being was before me, as she now stood about to tell her tale of sorrow.

"What is your name?" I asked, "and where do you live?"

"Mary Shea is my name," said she, "that is, my maiden name, and indeed for that matter I am not married yet."

"Married?" I exclaimed, "why you are scarcely seventeen years of age."

"True for you," replied she, "you guessed it very nigh, as I'll only be seventeen next Shrovetide."

"And what is your case? what do you want me to do?"

"I'll tell your Honor that," replied she, resuming in a moment a portion of her previous animation. "What I want your Honor to do is, to put down Eugene's name in the books as tenant for the little place I have up in the mountain."

"And who is Eugene? and how came you to have a little place of your own, and you so young as you are?"

"I'll tell your Honor all about it," she replied; "the way of it all was this," and again in a moment her countenance changed, her eyelids drooped, her form seemed to lose its height, and with a little hesitation as to where she should begin, she commenced her tale of woe.

"The way of it all was this: Your Honor was not here in the 'hungry year,'" (a term frequently used among the peasantry to describe the famine,) "but them was terrible times. I was only a little slip of a girl then—and sure for that matter I'm not much more this minute. But my father had a little place up in the mountains, the same as what I was now talking about. Well, you see, he was an ould man, and my mother was sickly, and they had no other child but me, and the place was very small, and when the potatoes blackened, sure they had no one but God to look to. 'Father,' says I, 'I fear ye'll die, and mother too, if ye don't get something to ate.' 'True for ye, child,' says father, 'but where are we to get it?' The great God has rotted the potatoes in the ground, and what other support had we all; and sure the neighbors are as bad off as we are.' Mother said nothing; she looked at father and me; she kissed me once or twice, as if to wish me good-by, and when I got up in the morning, I found her sitting in her clothes beside the fire, quite dead and stiff—not a month after the potatoes had blackened."

Well, ye see we lived far up in the mountains, and not meal of anything could be got there, except what I brought there myself,—and it was ten long miles from Kenmare. 'But still,' says I, 'I won't let father die if I can help it.' So we had a few hives of honey which the gentlemen liked, because the bees made it all on the heather; and I used to slip over to Kenmare, now and then, with a hive, and bring back a little meal to father,—we had no cow, as the place was too small to rear one. And I won't tell your Honor a lie when I say that sorra ha'porth we had to live on, except just the few hives of honey; and I knew when they were out, and I had no money to buy meal, we might just lie down and die. However, I said nothing to father about this, for I was only a slip of a girl; but I thought it for all that.

"Well, sure enough, after a time the honey was all sold, and I smothered the last bee I had,—though in troth I was sorry to do so, as I had reared them all myself, and I think they knew me, as they never once stung me, though I used to sit close to the hive watching them. However, I knew well it was better for them to die than father, so I had to smother them; and I went down to Kenmare with a sorrowful heart, and got 15s. for the hive. Well, with that I fed father and myself for another weary month; and when the meal was out, father says to me,—'Mary, dear, it's no use striving any longer against the hunger. I can't stand it. I'm weak and faint, and not able to go out to the public works, and I might as well die in the house as on the roads; and now mind, Mary dear, when I die, bury me beside your mother in the garden, and don't be making any noise about it,—calling a wake or a funeral, for all has enough to do these hard times for themselves.' 'Oh, father dear, don't talk that way,' says I, 'I'll just go out and see if I can't get something that will keep the life in ye yet.' So father said nothing, but just lay down on the bed as if to wait till I came home. Well, I had some strength and spirit in me yet. And as Eugene and I had known each other since we were little children, I thought I would just go to him and see if he could help me. But when I went to his house he was far away on the public works. So I had no heart or strength to go any further, and I had enough to do to get home. But oh! sorrow came heavy on me then; for when I called on father as I came in to ask him if God had sent him any food, he did not answer; and when I came to his bed, and put my hand upon his forehead, I found that he was dead and cold, and I was left alone in the world."

Here the poor girl's voice failed; and, commencing to weep bitterly, she turned her head away. I found the tears rising in my own eyes too, but endeavoring to turn her thoughts from this sad scene, I said:

"You have mentioned Eugene once or twice—who is Eugene?" She dried her eyes in a moment, and, resuming the natural vivacity of her manner, she called aloud to some one who was evidently near at hand:

"Eugene! where are you, Eugene! I wouldn't wonder if he was here this minute!"

And, truly enough, he was; for, slowly emerging from the same holly bush where I had observed the young damsel's eyes in the first instance, came a tall, good-looking youth, clean and fair, with a cheek as smooth and free from beard as a woman's. He was about 19 or 20 years of age, and as bashful as a youth detected under such circumstances—though she had evidently hid him there herself—could be.

"Don't be afeared, Eugene," cried the damsel,—"don't be afeared. The gentleman isn't angry. Come and speak to him this minute—he is shy, your Honor," said she, turning to me in a conciliatory voice, as if excusing and justifying her lover, over whom, in addition to his bashfulness, she had a great advantage in facility of speech and general knowledge of the world.—"he is shy, and doesn't know how to speake to a gentleman; and I hope you'll excuse him; but he is a good, kind boy for all that, and well able to become a tenant for the little place, if you will only put his name in the book."

"Well, but," I urged, "if I put his name down in the book, he will be the tenant and not you; and how would that answer your purpose?"

"Oh, sure, your Honor, it would be all the same; we would get married at once, and we would have the little place between us, as I feel lonesome in it all by myself."

"How large is this little place?" inquired I.

"Well, for that matter, it is big enough," she replied; "but indeed it's not good for much, as it's able to feed nothing but the bees. And, troth, I don't know where they find anything to gather except in the autumn, when the blossom comes upon the heather."

"What is the value of the place?" asked I.

"Well, indeed, it is not much. The late agent said it was good value, little cabin and all, for 'a 5d. a year, and the rent was never raised since, and we made a few perches of potato-garden near the house."

"And so you and Eugene really wants to marry and set up house upon a place only worth 7s. 6d. a year, cabin, mountain land, garden and all?"

"Well, indeed, your honor, I don't see what better we could do. You see Eugene and I have known each other a long time now, and all the neighbors knows we loves each other very much—and why wouldn't I love him, poor boy, when it was himself that saved my life?"

"How did he save your life?" I asked.

"Well, you see, I was telling you all about it," she resumed, "when you asked for Eugene, and I had to present him to your honor. But shure enough, it was Eugene, and no one else, that saved my life, that night I was telling you of when father died. I found him cold and stiff in the bed when I came home; and I had nothing in the house myself—no meal, nor bread, nor potatoes, nor a ha'penny; so I just sat down on the bedside near him, and—God forgive me!—I prayed that He would take me too; for I was helpless and sorrowful, and weak and down-hearted, with the hunger. And then I began to cry; and I thought of mother, how she had died, and how father was dead, and no one to bury him. 'And,' thinks I, 'if I die too, the cabin will make a decent little grave over us all, and no one will know anything about it!' So I was crying on, thinking of all these things, and wondering how it all came about, when I heard a footstep at the door, and I guessed at once it was Eugene's. So he never said a word to me at first, but he sat himself down beside me. And after a little, he says, 'What is it, Mary dear?' 'Oh, Eugene,' says I, 'mother is dead, and now father is dead; there he is before you, and I'm going to die too, for I'm broken-hearted, and have nothing to eat.' 'Eat this,' said Eugene, and he pulled an elegant loaf out of his pocket.—'I guessed ye came up to look for me to-day; and when I came home from the works and mother gave me my supper, I just put it in my pocket as I wasn't hungry myself, and came off with it to you. So eat it, Mary dear; for I couldn't eat it if a basket-full of bread was before me.' Well, I knew the poor boy had denied himself to give it to me; but I was well nigh gone, so I just gave him a loving look, and says I, 'Eugene, dear, I know well how it is; but I'll eat it for all that for your sake, and for fear I'd die before your face.' And so I did; 'And now, Mary,' says he, 'come home with me, and mother will take care of you for a bit; and in the morning I'll come out myself and bury father for you.' And so he did, the brave boy that he is, shy as he looks before your honor now. And we dug the grave between us, and put father into it, just as he was, for we had no coffin; where would we get one that year? and we laid him beside mother. And when the great day comes, sure they'll both rise together as well as if they were in a coffin of gold?"

Again she began to weep; but it was of short continuance this time.

"And now, won't you put Eugene's name in the book? and we'll go live there again, for it's hard to keep him away, and he is always pressing me to go with him to the priest. And we have put a new coat of thatch upon the little cabin, and may be God would be good to us, and the bees would thrive, and the hungry year may never come on us again."

It was hard to resist such an appeal,—especially when so easy an act would make a young and attached couple happy. But when I reflected upon the prospects in life upon which they were about to marry,—nothing but a few acres of worthless heather, the cabin and all the land attached worth only 7s. 6d. a year, and fit for nothing but to feed bees,—I felt that in granting her request, I was only perpetuating the very system which had killed her father and mother; and, if extended now again, could not possibly lead to anything but the utmost want and misery. To think of this noble youth and innocent and lovely maiden—such a handsome, loving couple as they were—sequatting on this miserable plot of irreclaimable mountain side! I could not bear to think of it, so I resolved, if I could, to save them from so unworthy a fate.

"Well, Mary, I have heard all you have to say, and I would gladly do anything in my power to serve you and Eugene," but I cannot bear the thought of a handsome girl like you, and a fine, manly boy like him, settling down for life on this miserable patch on the side of a barren mountain. I am thinking it would be far better to try your fortune in America together, and go out like the other emigrants, so many of whom were pressing to get their names down to-day."

Mary was silent for a little. At last she said—

"Well, your honor, I often thought it would be better—shure enough—to try our fortune in America. But, to marry and settle on that small patch of barren land where my little place is; but I couldn't bear to think of going out on charity as a pauper, never yet get poor relief from the workhouse; and I wouldn't wish to go to America with the likes of the emigrants your honor is now sending out."

"I understand your scruples," I replied, "so I will propose another plan. What do you think if Eugene were to go out first,—just for one year,—and see whether the country would suit you and him? Let him return at the end of the year; and, if he does not like America, then I will put his name in the books as tenant for your own little place, or probably I shall be able to give you and him a better farm by that time."

"I would be loth to part with him for a whole long year," said Mary, looking lovingly upon the beautiful Eugene; "but still I think it might be the best way after all; for no doubt it is a poor place to settle on. But Eugene has no money to go out with, and I have little or none to help him, and he couldn't go without that."

"He shall not fail for want of funds; I will lend him the money for his voyage. If he return rich, he will repay me; if not, why it can't be helped."

"Your honor is very good," replied she, looking mournfully at Eugene; "but what will I do without him? and where will I go while he is away?"

"You can stay at mother's, dear, while I am away," broke in Eugene, who seemed suddenly to awake to an energy he had not before exhibited. "You well know she always loved you as a daughter, and she will care for you for my sake as well as for your own."

"I believe your honor's right," said Mary, turning to me; "let him go and try his fortune for one year; but mind," she added as she looked toward the lad, "mind, Eugene, you must swear to me on the Book you will come back—rich or poor, I don't care which—within the one year."

"I will swear it to you freely," replied Eugene, who seemed suddenly to find his tongue and all his other energies at the prospect of such an opening.

"And will your honor promise, on the word of a gentleman, to give us back the little place, or get us another better one when he returns, if he won't take me out with him again?" asked Mary, with an appealing look.

"Indeed I will; I faithfully promise it, if I am alive and here."

"Well then, let it be so," said the weeping Mary; "and now the sooner the better. When will your honor give him the money that he may go at once?"

"To-morrow morning. He shall also have a new suit of clothes, as fast as the tailor can make them, and I have no doubt he will get ship at once on my payment

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

Access to the City by Non-Residents.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In your editorial of Saturday on "The Defects of Social Machinery in New-York," there are truths which cannot be gainsaid. You justly remark that for the country resident doing business in the City, his daily entrance is an arduous struggle with crowds and dust; and to get to his residence by either of our two largest railroads he is obliged, before reaching his starting point, to endure three-quarters of an hour of dust and standing in a crowded horse-car.

Will you allow me to make an exception from what seems a general rule, and in favor of the railroad by which my friends and I travel daily?

A man doing business anywhere near the corner of Broadway and Chambers-street, can walk in a few minutes to the foot of the latter street, and then take a boat roomy and warm in Winter, airy and cool in Summer. This boat will take him to Hunter's Point in twenty-five minutes, and the boats now building will do it in fifteen minutes. As this boat reaches the wharf, there comes in an adjoining slip another boat, bringing from Thirty-fourth-street the ladies of his family, who have been shopping or visiting in the upper part of the City. They then take their seats in new and commodious cars, heated by hot-water pipes under each seat, drawn by powerful and new locomotives, and in half an hour, which will be reduced to fifteen minutes when the new road is finished, they are placed in Flushing, a town of broad avenues and shaded streets, where perfect health is being insured by the most comprehensive system of drainage which has yet been adopted in this country. Should he keep his own carriage an hour over a smooth road, 100 feet wide, will place him in Thirty-fourth-street, New-York.

I have some acquaintance with the rural retreats of England to which you allude, and have found none which possessed greater facilities of intercourse with the metropolis than that in which I have made my home. Since our railroad has changed hands and is being relaid with Prussian iron throughout and with steel upon the curves, we feel that we are safe from accidents like that recently upon the Long Island Railroad. Yours, A COUNTRYMAN.

Irishmen and Cubans.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I beg to enter my humble protest against the assumption of Mr. G. F. TRAIN, as portraying the feelings of Irishmen on the liberation of Cuba. When I wish the Cubans God-speed, (if I am not mistaken,) it is the wish and prayer of every good Irishman. The letter of Mr. TRAIN—as it read this morning—almost stunned me; I am sure it will astonish and disgust every true Irishman and friend of liberty, as it has your very humble servant. H. E.,

Street-cleaning Contract.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In 1841 the sewerage system of London first got under the control of engineers, who, observing that the greater part of the street dirt went into the sewers, conceived that all of it might be worked through them, and that much of the cost of cleansing might be saved. They experimented, and found that by flushing all the dirt could thus be disposed of, without clogging the sewers, and at less than half the cost of sweeping and cartage. Since then there have been further experiments, in London and in Sheffield, confirming these conclusions. In Sheffield the water-pressure is greater than in London, and less water is required—about half a gallon per square yard of pavement at each washing. Mr. SAMUEL MCELROY, C. E., who was Assistant Engineer on the Brooklyn Water Works, and acquainted with the sewerage works, read a paper before the Polytechnic Association of the American Institute, in which he reviewed the English reports and recommended the system for New-York. His paper is in the Transactions of the Institute.

In 1863 I brought the subject to the notice of our City Inspector, who published in his annual report an abstract of the London experiments; and within a few years, I have published articles on it, in mechanical journals; and in compliance with a general invitation, I wrote to the commissioners who made the present street-cleaning contract, proposing this system, modified by using fire-engines to do the work, when not employed at fires. The letter was read until it came to washing the dirt into the sewers; and then the reading was stopped, as too absurd to deserve attention. Between the footpaths who made the contract, and the engineers who have approved the washing system, I do not hesitate in choosing; and I offer my plan for the consideration of those who, in time, may have influence enough to get it considered.

There are two parts to the work; first, to wash the dirt through the sewers; second, to wash it out of the docks. The first can be done by self-propelling steam fire-engines; and the second by floating steam fire-engines. These will be ready instantly to go to fires, and will be as efficient as if made for no other use; and the interest and wages now paid for a few hours' work at fires will be spread over constant work, and thus the expenses will be reduced.

I designed the locomotive part of the four self-propelling fire-engines that were built at the Novelty Works for Messrs. LEE & LAMREE, eleven years ago. An engine somewhat like one of them, with the addition of a nozzle to throw a sheet jet, would, by its jet, drive forward the dirt on a pavement. In a like way, a floating fire-engine, by jets, would stir up and drive out the mud in docks. Experience has shown that jets of water will remove earth more cheaply than any other means.

I do not know why the washing system has not come into use, but I imagine several reasons. First, it may take more water than can be spared; second, it may leave puddles in the streets—these puddles holding dirt, and softening the foundations of the pavement; third, in the way adopted in England, by hose jets, it was a nuisance to passers-by, and could not be used by day in thoroughfares. To save water and avoid puddles, I propose an air-jet, behind the water-jet, of sufficient force to drive the water out of the holes and leave the pavement nearly dry. The air will assist in driving the water, and will enable the work to be done with much less water. During a rain the air-jet alone may suffice; and when the street is wet, but little water will be required; and the work can be done without throwing water upon people if the jets be close to the pavement, as they must be to work efficiently.

In this way it will be easy to clean a pavement. In the old way pavements are never cleaned. The only times when they are nearly cleaned are during violent rains; but even then there remain puddles in which dirt is suspended. The air-jet will drive away these puddles.

When near the docks the engines can use salt water. And, as the pressure common in fire-engines is six times greater than in water mains, and the quantity of water required is less in proportion as the pressure is greater, we can do the work without drawing from the Croton more than can be spared for a long time to come, perhaps until a better system of paving and locomotion shall render less cleaning necessary.

Around London macadam roads are swept at great expense, but much to the comfort of those who ride or live near them. The air-jet would blow the dust from them, and would clear them of puddles, which cause softening and rapid wear. Around Paris the roads are sprinkled. An engine with an air-jet in front and a sprinkler behind would keep roads nearly free from dust and mud, and in the best condition for wheels.

I wish to trumpet my design of a floating fire-engine, to avenge myself on pretended experts who have thrown cold water upon it. Five years ago I brought it before the Polytechnic. I proposed to propel it by jets, so as to use the pumps instead of separate apparatus for propelling. This would not do; it had been tried on a boat here twenty years ago, and had failed. Within a year we had reports of a forty-foot propelled by jets, on the Clyde, which worked so well that another was ordered. I reported this to the Polytechnic: it was not so bad as at first; but it wouldn't do; we had tried it. A few months later we had reports of a race on the Thames, between a paddle and a jet-boat, in which the jet boat; this was better, but still doubtful. Next came the reports of the Waterwitch and Vixen, in which the jet worked best, and even to this day is advocated, by a few men of note, as better than the screw for space service. This did not silence the opposition; but it raised a general and long round of applause, which dishonored it.

All I claimed was that, with the great boiler-power required for a floating fire-engine, the jet would give all the speed necessary to arrive at fires in time, and the superiority of a jet-boat in maneuvering would enable her to get into docks quicker than a boat propelled by screw or paddles; and if the fuel burned was excessive, it would matter little, because the distance run would be little. The results in England have fully proved all I claimed, and have, moreover, raised a dispute as to whether the jet will not save fuel.

The jet dredger, available at all times as a fire-engine to protect ships and buildings near the water, will obviate a chief objection raised here to the street-washing system. The filling up of the docks has been the most ready objection, but there are engineers who do not think it of much force, for the removal of dirt from docks costs less than its removal from streets.

A Curious Dialogue and Prophecy.

MAHEBIS, St. Lawrence County, N. Y., Saturday, April 24, 1869.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In your paper of the 18th instant, the belief is expressed that Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, and a few others therein named, will be made Lords. This reminds me of a prediction I once heard that gentleman express, in Canada, soon after LEE's surrender. I had put up at a hotel in the City of Kingston, Canada, and was directed into the reading room, in which were (to me) two strangers, one short in stature, the other tall. They were reading the news, and bitterly commenting thereon, when the following conversation, substantially, ensued between them:

SHORT MAN—So then, after all, the South has succumbed.

TALL MAN—It is no more than I expected from the first; but one revolution begets another, and so from this another will spring, less formidable in itself, but, through European intervention, far more disastrous in its result to the huge Republican serpent of America, whose divided tongue will again war upon itself within its now almost mortally bruised head.

SHORT MAN—Does your Honor mean to infer that the Republic will go to naught?

TALL MAN—Yes. Slow but sure, and I will not only live to see the most northerly States and British America confederated, but I, myself, will be elected first Viceroy over the same.

SHORT MAN—I presume your Honor to be jesting!

TALL MAN—Not at all; for in a few years I shall be Knighted, and in a short time subsequent thereto I shall be created a Peer of the Realm; and after that seven years of eventful time will not have run their course before events will have transpired to induce Queen VICTORIA to constituting me Her Britannic Majesty's first Viceroy in and over her thus enlarged American Dominion.

SHORT MAN—I hope it may prove so, to her most Royal Majesty and to your honor.

TALL MAN—Such is infallible destiny.

Then both took to reading again, and I left the room. Upon inquiring I ascertained the tall man to be Hon. JOHN A. MACDONALD, since Knighted, and probably to be made a Lord; but whether he will become Viceroy over such Dominion, and prove himself a true prophet throughout, remains to be seen. A SUBSCRIBER AND CITIZEN.

The Case of Mr. Ashley.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Without any desire to interfere in your discussion with Hon. J. M. ASHLEY, in regard to his Colorado letters, I deem it due to the truth of history that a few facts be given your readers. That gentleman says:

> "I have never been convicted of, nor have I ever confessed to any act of official corruption, and what is far more important to me and mine, I have the consciousness of being guilty of no act official or otherwise, during my term of service in Congress, inconsistent with the character of a Representative."

What Mr. ASHLEY has done, as shown by his own letters and writings long since made public and yet undisputed, may be briefly stated thus: He proposed to one of his constituents, F. M. CASE, that he (CASE) might, under certain conditions precedent, be appointed Surveyor-General of Colorado. These conditions were, substantially, these: First, that ASHLEY's two brothers should have subordinate positions; second, that CASE should give to ASHLEY and those on whom ASHLEY was depending for help to get the place, all the other "sub-appointments, surveying contracts," &c.; third, that CASE should engage in "land and town sight speculations," and admit ASHLEY as a "full partner;" fourth, that CASE should not engage in any such speculations in which ASHLEY should not be a partner. With these conditions on CASE's part, ASHLEY, as an inducement to the arrangement, held up to CASE the extraordinary pecuniary profits to be gained thereby, and as one ground of assurance thereof stated that if GROW was made Speaker of the House, he (ASHLEY) would be Chairman of the Committee on Territories, and as such would "know all the proposed expenditures in the Territories," and would use such knowledge to "post him (CASE) up in advance," as a means of "speculation." Not satisfied with a verbal or mere written agreement, ASHLEY required legal partnership papers to be signed by CASE as a condition precedent to the appointment.

Now, it is matter of history that Mr. ASHLEY, after the appointment, took steps toward the fulfillment of this contract—went to Kendallville, Ind., to "fix the surveying contracts," &c.; had his "brother ELI appointed Chief Clerk," and demanded of CASE a strict compliance with the agreement. He says he never made anything out of the matter. If so, it was not his fault. It is shown by CASE's testimony that, regarding the arrangement as inconsistent with his duty to the Government, he repudiated it, refused to allow ASHLEY to dictate who should have contracts for surveying, and refused to engage in land speculation. This is the reason ASHLEY made nothing by the arrangement; and so angry was he at CASE, that he subsequently effected his removal as Surveyor.

Mr. ASHLEY speaks of having been "vindicated" by Congressional investigation. That was to just this extent: On the second day of the session of 1862-3, the matter having already been brought to the attention of the House by Hon. H. L. DAWES, of Massachusetts, Mr. ASHLEY asked for a Committee of Investigation, which consisted of five members, one of whom was of the "Indiana delegation," to whom Mr. ASHLEY says he had "promised all the subordinate places to get help." This Committee closed its examination of witnesses in January, but did not make its report until two or three days previous to the adjournment, their report never having been read in or seen by the House, not being printed till some ten days after that Congress expired. So there was no opportunity whatever given for action on the subject. Mr. ASHLEY says he never was "convicted of corruption." We see the reason. It was the expectation of leading members of the House that he would be expelled, in case that body was called to act on the subject.

Mr. ASHLEY says he has no consciousness of having done anything "inconsistent with the character of a Representative." It is quite evident his views of what constitutes the proper "character of a Representative" are essentially different from those that once prevailed in this country. It will be a sorry day when his standard becomes universally accepted by the people. If such use by a "Representative" of his official influence is proper, why cannot members of the Cabinet—aye, the President himself—make as condition precedent to appointments, that the appointees shall take them in as "full partners" in speculations, whether it be with Surveyors in "lands and town sights," or with Quartermasters in army or navy supplies? How would it do for Secretary COX to make it a condition to the appointment of Indian Agents that they should make a written contract with him as partner in all "speculations" in which their official position might enable them to engage?

Mr. ASHLEY speaks of the indorsement of his Colorado speculation by his late constituents. To what extent this is true may be judged by the fact that since the development of that affair he has at each election run from 300 to 3,000 behind his ticket, and was finally beaten over 600 in a district that gave GRANT some 2,400. Another "indorsement" similar to this was his libel suit for $25,000 against some newspaper that charged him with "corruption," but which suit was prior thrown out of Court for lack of defense, and finally abandoned. TRUTH.

Mole-in-the-Day's Statue.

Soon after the tragic death of the Chippewa Chief, Mole-in-the-Day, about a year ago, it was stated that he left an estate worth two millions of dollars. But his administrator publishes in a Minnesota paper a list of his property for sale, which he enumerates as follows:

One box stove, one parlor stove, one pair bob sleighs, one grindstone, lot of stove pipe, one buggy, one horse, four colts, one ox yoke, one two-seated cutter, one single-horse cutter, one set of harness, lot of old harness, lot of sleigh bells, one tent, one single harness, a lot of scythes, snathes and hay forks, and other articles too numerous to mention.

INDIANA.

Legislative Proceedings—The Agricultural College Located at Lafayette—Important Change of the Indiana Divorce Laws—The German Languages to be Taught in the Common Schools.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LAFAYETTE, Ind., Thursday, April 29, 1869.

The proceedings of the Indiana Legislature for the last few days have been quite interesting. A number of laws have been passed which cannot but exercise a very salutary influence upon the welfare of our people, and add to the character and prosperity of our State. The Agricultural College question, which, here in Indiana, seemed destined to lead to nothing but endless and most unpleasable quarrels, has at length been settled, in consequence of the generous offer made by one of the most liberal-minded and wealthy citizens of Lafayette, Hon. JOHN PURDUE, who promised to add the sum of $150,000 to the college fund in case the Legislature should resolve to locate the College in Tippecanoe County, of which the City of Lafayette is the capital. A highly interesting debate on this subject took place yesterday in the House of Representatives, and for awhile it seemed as though the matter would again be indefinitely postponed; but, finally, a shrewd and practical member moved that a ballot be immediately taken as to the county where the Agricultural College should be located. This was done, and Tippecanoe County (Lafayette) received a large majority of the votes. The State Senate had previously already indirectly expressed itself in favor of the location of the Agricultural College in Tippecanoe County, so that the whole matter may now be looked upon as definitely disposed of. Steps will immediately be taken to secure the completion of the college buildings at an early day. The institution will bear the name of Hon. JOHN PURDUE, that being one of the conditions under which he offered to add $150,000 to the college fund. The people of Lafayette are of course highly elated at the bright prospects which the location of the Agricultural College so close to them opens to them, and a large increase in the prosperity of the city and county is confidently predicted.

CHANGE OF THE INDIANA DIVORCE LAWS.

Our Indiana Divorce laws, which have hitherto been a standing disgrace to the good name of our State, have at length been changed by the Legislature in such a manner as to render it impossible for parties not living in the State to obtain "Indiana divorces" by merely paying a liberal fee to some unscrupulous lawyer. The change is not quite as radical as it should have been; but it is sufficient to put a stop to manoeuvres which have made this State for a long time past a sort of negative Gretna Green for all desirous of severing the hymeneal knot with as little trouble and delay as possible. The new law requires that persons filing applications for divorce shall have been bona fide residents of the State for one year preceding the filing of the application, and for ninety days bona fide residents of the county. It furthermore makes it a felony for any person to make false representations to the Court to assist in procuring a divorce, prescribes confinement in the Penitentiary as a penalty, and applies the operation of the act to any attorney who shall lend his assistance in procuring a divorce through fraudulent means. Henceforth the New-York divorce brokers will no longer be able to do as profitable a business through their Indiana agents as heretofore.

THE GERMAN LANGUAGE IN THE COMMON SCHOOLS.

Our German citizens are exceedingly gratified at the passage by the Legislature of an amendment to the School law, authorizing the German language to be taught in the common schools when the parents or guardians of twenty-five pupils shall require it. Our leading German citizens have been petitioning for the adoption of such an amendment to the School law for many years past, and it is a matter of surprise that its adoption should have been delayed so long.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS FOR COLORED CHILDREN.

In adopting the bill for the education of colored children in the common schools, the Legislature has at length removed another relic of the old pro-slavery régime, which was formerly so powerful in this State. The Senate Committee recommended the addition to the bill as it came from the House of Representatives of an amendment that colored children should occupy the same school-room with white children where no objection was made. This was voted down, and the House bill was passed.

OTHER IMPORTANT NEW LAWS.

The new Election law, passed by the Legislature on Tuesday last, abolishes our Spring elections, and prescribes that henceforth general elections shall be held only biennially, on the second Tuesday in October. This law will save the people of the State a great deal of expense, and is cordially approved by the great mass of the members of both parties. The report of the Committee of Investigation on the outrages committed on the male and female convicts by the late warden and the jailers of the State Prison at Jeffersonville, has been ordered to be printed in spite of the determined opposition of the influential friends of the parties implicated in this scandalous affair. The publication of the report, it may be safely predicted, will create a profound sensation, although some of the atrocities perpetrated by the villains at whose mercy the unfortunate prisoners were, are already generally known. There is one thing connected with this affair which it is difficult to understand, and that is, why are no steps taken to prosecute those men who tortured the male convicts and ravished the females? And why has the infamous warden been permitted to leave the State unmolested after handing in his resignation?

A CLERICAL TRIAL AND ITS RESULTS.

A most curious scene took place a few days ago at St. John's Episcopal Church, in Lafayette. In the presence of a large crowd of spectators Rev. L. W. RUSS, the Rector of St. John's Church, was publicly admonished by the Right Rev. Mr. TALBOT, Assistant Bishop of Indiana, for immoral conduct, in an address whose bitterness and severity excited general surprise. Mr. RUSS had been tried by a court established in accordance with the regulations of his church on a number of charges, seemingly of no very great importance, and was finally convicted of having witnessed the performance of the "Black Crook," and of having applied exceedingly uncomplimentary terms to a female member of his flock. The whole affair has produced quite a commotion among the Episcopalians of Indiana. Mr. Russ' own congregation sustains him very earnestly, and strongly disapproves of the course pursued toward him by his enemies.

THE OLEM ABRAMS AFFAIR.

Mrs. OLEM has at last been sent to the State Prison. For some reason as yet unexplained the prison officials treat this murderess with unusual lenity. She has not been required to don the ugly prison uniform, and has been permitted to furnish her cell at her own expense. It is reported even that she receives her food, not from the prison kitchen, but from a Jeffersonville hotel, and she is employed in the light work of mending the clothes of some of the other prisoners. While the women imprisoned in the same penitentiary for having committed trifling larcenies are treated with great rigor, this murderess is granted privileges hitherto entirely unknown in the State Prison régime. Her accomplice, ABRAMS, will be tried next month, at Indianapolis. The interest of the public in the Young murder has considerably abated since Mrs. OLEM has been taken to Jeffersonville. There can be but little doubt that ABRAMS will be convicted, and, like Mrs. OLEM, sentenced to the State Prison for life. W. C.

The Tennessee Militia Being Mustered Out.

From the Nashville (Tenn.) Press & Times, May 5.

Under the amended Militia law the State Guards were called out about two months ago, at a time when terrorism existed in many counties of the State. Colored men were being whipped, shot and hung, in some localities, almost nightly. Union men were attacked in their houses at night, and were in fear of their lives, and uncondemned men were wrenched from the officers of the law, taken from jail and hung.

The calling out of the militia was attended by a speedy cessation of these outrages. The Kuklux disappeared as if by magic. The militia sent into disaffected counties restored confidence in the minds of the Union people, and sent terror to the hearts of the evil-doers. Many of the most notorious Kuklux leaders left the State. The militia, now, after having accomplished their mission, will be disbanded and sent home, subject to be called out at the Governor's discretion. Five full companies will, however, be retained in the service, under the command of General COOPER. Comptroller BLACKBURN having returned from New-York yesterday with money to pay off the men, the mustering out was commenced at once.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Agricultural Convention—Formation of an Agricultural and Mechanical Society—Southern versus Northern Manufactures of Cotton—Facts and Figures—Use of Fertilizers.

From Our Own Correspondent.

COLUMBIA, Tuesday, May 4, 1869.

The great feature of the past week in the State Agricultural Convention, which met on the 26th and 27th ult. at this place. It is in many respects one of the most important assemblages held here since the war. Twenty-two counties, out of thirty-one, were represented, and the number of delegates present was 123. Much of the best talent of the State was there. The occasion called for it. All the industrial vocations have been revolutionized by the abolition of slavery; and every pursuit demanding either mind or muscle must be recast. In agriculture, especially, the changes are vital—new crops, new kinds of labor, new implements and new modes of culture. The Convention grew out of this necessity for new and vigorous thought in all these things. The men were in earnest. The body promptly organized a permanent association, called the Agricultural and Mechanical Society of South Carolina. It is to meet yearly, and to have an annual fair, both on the second Wednesday of November. There were no negroes among the delegates. Committees were appointed upon all the leading ideas of the day; not only upon cotton, rice, stock-raising, corn and fencing, but also upon immigration and labor, sorghum, commercial fertilizers, improved implements, fish culture and bee culture. The subject of manufactures—especially that of cotton—received a great deal of discussion, and some able papers were presented upon these points. Upon the whole, the movement was characterized by a great deal of good sense, good temper, and a practical character that has been wanting in too many of our deliberative bodies.

MANUFACTURING COTTON IN THE SOUTH.

There are eighty-two cotton factories in the South which run 314,000 spindles; while in the North are 861 factories which run 8,161,000 spindles. And notwithstanding this disparity, it is easily demonstrable that cotton manufacture is more profitable here than in the North, and more profitable than in England. A few figures will set this matter in its proper light. The prices given are received from the very highest authorities, the Superintendent of the Saluda Cotton Mills at this place furnishing the facts for both estimates. The price of cotton in Columbia is put at 20 cents a pound; in New-York, at 22.5 cents; and in Manchester, England, at 24 cents. These are fair proportions. The cost of making a pound of cotton into yarn in Columbia is 9 cents, while in New-York it is 14.31 cents; and in Manchester it is 11.25 cents. Let us first compare Southern manufactures with Northern. The cost of freight and insurance from Columbia to New-York is eight-tenths of a cent a pound; commission and cartage there cannot reach 3.01 cents; so that the cost of the pound of Southern-made yarn delivered upon the counters of New-York is, all told, 31.51 cents. The cost of the pound of yarn made in New-York is 22.5 cents added to 14.31, making it 36.81; that is to say, the Southern-made yarn has cost the maker full five cents a pound less than the same made in the North. Now for the English. A manufacturer of cotton yarns in Manchester, England, having examined the books of the Saluda Cotton Mills, gives us the information that the manufacture is done here cheaper than in Manchester by about the difference in value of currency and gold. His figures, reduced to the same currency as the above estimates, give us these as the items of a pound of his yarn. Price of the cotton 24 cents, and price of making into yarn 11.25 cents, making the total cost to the manufacturer 35.25 cents for a pound of yarn. The cost of transfer of the pound of Southern yarn—costing in the South 20 cents—from the South to England, is, including both freight and insurance barely 1.5 cents. This, added to the preceding cost, makes the cost to England 36.5 cents, whereas the pound manufactured in England costs 36.25 cents; showing that the Southern manufacturer can put his yarns down in England 4.75 cents cheaper than the English manufacturer can make them there.

These estimates all refer to No. 20 yarns made upon JENKS' ring-traveler spindles; and they have been made with the greatest care by a man who is investing his large property in this business—who has been at it all his life—and whose individual interest does not seem to lie in exciting to rival establishments in the South. His own statements, which I have condensed and combined, are very minute and carefully digested.

USE OF COMMERCIAL FERTILIZERS.

The immense increase in the use of guanos and the various phosphates—known now as commercial fertilizers, and so generalized—is also important and significant. A man engaged in its importation and use estimates that South Carolina has this year bought ten times as much of these fertilizers as she ever did in one year before. One fact from which the estimate comes is the case of Newberry County, which has, through its regular merchants, imported sixteen times as much this year as ever before. The estimate of ten times for the whole State is not excessive. The immense quantity appears in another way. The entire freightage of the South Carolina Railroad—from Charleston to Columbia and the interior of the State generally—including all kinds of freight, up to the 1st of April this year, is 25,892 tons; and of this, 16,815 tons were fertilizers. That is to say, 65 per cent of the entire freightage of the main railroad coming into the State is commercial fertilizers. They are to be applied to all possible kinds of crops—corn, cotton, grains, trees and gardens.

COTTON FRAUD.

Eighteen bales of cotton offered in this market a few days ago were discovered to be fraudulently packed—foxed is the popular word—having dirt, cotton seed and wet cotton put in the centres, while good cotton in proper condition appeared upon the outside. The fraud was traced to the freedmen, who packed the cotton as their own, and took this method to increase their share of the crop. BOIRE.

The Late Rains in the South.

From the Mobile (Ala.) Register, May 1.

The intelligence from the rivers indicates the probability that the flood is the heaviest ever yet known. For sixty miles below Tuscaloosa everything was under water before the last rain, and affairs must be much more serious now. Captain CHARLEY LOCKLIN reports that during the Cornelia's trip it rained every mile of the way from Mobile to Wetumpka. It is not only the overflow, but the extreme saturation and washing of the ground which has inflicted and extended the operations of last failure. Replanting of cotton on a large scale will be necessary, and even this will have to be relinquished in many instances for want of seed. Indeed, some good calculators are of opinion that the replanting of much of the cotton with corn will be anything but a misfortune to the country in such many of the planters, with their habitual selfishness, had availed themselves of the general opinion that small planting was the true policy, to plant an extra breadth of cotton themselves, and that to no great an extent as practically to frustrate the very notion on which they were building their hopes of profit.

From the Columbus (Ga.) Sun, May 5.

The very heavy rains that have fallen in this and the adjoining counties in Georgia and Alabama the past week, have seriously damaged the young cotton by washing it up and covering it up with sand and dirt. In this way the stand of cotton has been seriously and irreparably damaged. The grass is fast taking possession of many plantations, and if the rains continue any longer, much of the cotton planted will have to be abandoned for want of the necessary labor to clean it out.

From the Jackson (Miss.) Clarion, May 1.

The recent heavy rains have caused the streams in this section to be very much swollen, and similar accounts come from other portions of the State. Pearl River has not been so high for many years, and all the creeks and bayous are full to overflowing, seriously damaging crops in the bottom lands.

FEARED HIS MOTHER MORE THAN DROWNING.—A few days ago a small boy fell off a wharf in this city, and was rescued from drowning by the bystanders. Seeing his mother coming down the street, he immediately exhibited an preference to drown rather than risk the necessary means of getting his clothes wet. Accordingly he sprang into the water three times more, being fished out each time with considerable difficulty. Finally his mother promised not to whip him, and he consented to be rescued. The second time he had the boy got home, however, then his mother broke her promise, and gave him an unmerciful thrashing.—Portsmouth (N. H.) Chronicle.

THE MARYLAND HOMICIDE.

Trial of Miss Cairnes for the Murder of Her Alleged Betrayer.

Correspondence of the Baltimore Sun.

BELAIR, Harford Co., Md., Thursday, May 6.

The trial of Miss MARTHA J. CAIRNES for the murder of NICHOLAS MCCOMAS, her alleged seducer, on the 10th of April last, at Jarrettsville, commenced here yesterday. From the large number of witnesses summoned and the regular jurors, after the rejection of a good many on account of having formed an opinion, a jury was impanelled. The prisoner, a good-looking woman, about 25 or 30 years of age, pleaded "Not guilty."

Attorney-General JONES opened the case for the prosecution, setting forth the facts expected to be proved as establishing the crime of murder. HENRY W. ARCHER, for the defence, then addressed some rational and pathetic remarks to the Court and jury on the peculiar character of the case.

The first witness called was John Ware, who testified that he had been acquainted with McComas, but not with Miss Cairnes, though he knew her by sight; while at Jarrettsville, on the 10th of April, he saw her enter the bar-room and come rapidly to the door, looking upon the porch where he and McComas both were; the latter was about ten feet to the right of the door, and Miss Cairnes, leveling a revolver which she held in her hand, fired in the direction of McComas; then stepping backward, and apparently preparing to fire again, said: "Gentlemen, you all know what it's done for;" did not know McComas was shot; witness told McComas to run, but he staggered backward, catching hold of an upright of the porch; by great pain his eyes glared, and he seemed had the appearance of a dying man; Miss Cairnes advanced and fired a second time, when McComas fell off the porch, and while he was lying upon the ground she fired two more shots at him; she then passed into the bar-room; witness helped to take McComas up; they carried him into the house, but never knew his name after the firing commenced; it was found that one ball had penetrated the left breast, near the heart, and another the upper portion of the thigh.

John T. Street, sworn—Resides at Jarrettsville; knew Miss Cairnes and McComas; was at home when McComas died; it occurred at my house; she asked me if McComas was there; I told her I thought not; she said, "Yes he is;" when I left the parlor, I went into the dining-room and stood at the table until several shots were fired; I then walked out, and some one said, "He is a dead man;" the time of the shooting was not one minute from the time I saw her until it took place; when I got out of the door of the dining-room into the bar-room, McComas was lying on the ground; he was picked up and taken into the parlor; I was much confused to recollect anything about the windows.

Several other witnesses who were eye-witnesses of the occurrence were called, but their testimony disclosed nothing not heretofore elicited.

The case for the prosecution was closed this morning, and the examination of witnesses for the defence was commenced. Abraham Gladden testified that he has known Miss Cairnes intimately ever since she was born; her general character is as good as can be in every respect; her social position is very good; never heard of any complaints; thinks she has no superior in the neighborhood; that she is kind and gentle and modest and charitable, and very active in cases of sickness, death, and Sunday School celebrations.

Thomas M. Gaither also testified as to the good character of the prisoner.

Thomas M. Ray testified—Live in the neighborhood of Miss Cairnes; have known her all her life; am a connection of her family; she is the daughter of my niece; our families have been somewhat together; know her intimately; her character is unimpeachable; never heard a word derogatory to her character until this came out; she was remarked as a modest young lady; never heard of her being other than charitable and kind in disposition; she has lived with her mother since her father's death; was still living there up to this occurrence.

Thomas Hope, Rev. Thomas Myers, Rev. T. S. C. Smith, William Hope, John Rush Street and several others testified to the good character of the prisoner, her mildness, amiability, and zealousness in works of charity, &c.

Gabriel Smithson sworn—I have known Miss Cairnes intimately for about twenty years; she visited my daughters frequently, her mother's house being only half a mile from mine; I never heard her general reputation questioned; was at Jarrettsville at the time of the occurrence and saw the firing; saw McComas on the porch; saw Miss Cairnes appear at the door and shoot instantly; she looked pale, and her manner appeared wild and resolute; her expression was quite different from what it formerly had been; after the thing was over, I told the people I thought she was crazy, and would take her own life before morning; the whole affair occupied only half a minute.

Mrs. Mary A. Cairnes, mother of the prisoner, sworn—Knew Nicholas McComas for seven years; he was engaged to be married to my daughter, applied formally to witness for her consent to the engagement.

The State here objected to the witness deposing to the declarations of McComas, as not tending to show the guilt or innocence of the prisoner.

After discussion, the Court decided that the testimony of witness should be received as evidence, and Mrs. Cairnes continued: McComas was received into the family as an accepted suitor; dresses were made up and other preparations made for the marriage; no time was set; McComas put it off on various frivolous pretexts from one time to another; he finally appointed a day in November last for the marriage, but never came to the house afterward; my daughter suffered much distress of mind in consequence of this action; wept and shed tears; witness' daughter is now the mother of a child; McCOMAS was aware of the fact; when the last promised to marry her; witness inquired of McCOMAS what he was going to do; he said it was all his fault; that he would take care of her; witness said, "You marry her, and I will take care of her;" McCOMAS said, "Don't you blame MARTHA JANE;" I said, "I will not throw her out of the doors;" finally he promised to marry her the next Thursday; his calculation was to go to Baltimore and be married, but he never came, and MARTHA JANE sat up until 4 o'clock, waiting for him, and then went to bed weeping; she was confined on the 1st day of January last; Dr. MERRITT JAMES attended her; there was a wedding-dress and a wedding-ring, and it is on her finger there now.

THIRD DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

BELAIR, Md., Friday May 7.

This morning, after two or three ladies had testified to the good character of Miss CAIRNES, and to the fact that she was making her wedding clothes in the Winter of 1867-8, Gabriel Smithson was recalled and stated that since the close of Miss Cairne's testimony, heard Mrs. Cairnes speak of a promise made by McComas to marry her daughter; had some conversation with N. McComas the same night; he was at my house; I told him I thought he was about getting into difficulties; he denied it; said he didn't know; I said, "you are;" at last he agreed he was, and burst into tears; he said, "it is my fault;" no names were mentioned; he did not mention Miss Cairne's name; I told him he had better marry her; he did not give me much satisfaction; he said she was a fine girl and a lady; I did not understand him as refusing to marry her; he did not agree to marry her; I persuaded him to do so; he said he was of the same opinion; he spoke very highly of her as a lady; said it was his fault, and wept bitterly; McComas was 35 or 40 years of age; had but little property; he lived with his mother and three sisters, one of whom is very delicate, the other two strong and healthy girls; McComas' father died suddenly, full of his house; McComas' mother and sisters were dependent upon him for support; his brothers are married men, have families; they are of limited means; on the night of his conversation with McComas alluded to above, there was a corn husking at his house; word was sent out to the pile for him and McComas to come in the house; witness went in and found Mrs. Cairnes there, and as he had nothing to do with it, he left; the thing had come out then; knowing that neither McComas nor Mrs. Cairnes wanted him, witness left; the next morning it was after this witness had the conversation with McComas; Comas said he loved the girl better than any woman he ever knew, but said he was not at to marry; witness did not know what McComas meant by this; he always spoke in the highest terms of the girl, said she was a lady; afterward, at Jarrettsville, McComas called witness out and told him that they had brought suit against him for the maintenance of the child, and said that he was willing to pay for it; McComas then alluded to some slanderous talk which had been going around the neighborhood, that the child was either a married man's or a black man's; McComas said this was all wrong; did not deny the paternity of the child, but said that they could not prove that he had promised to marry her; witness then told him that he had better leave the neighborhood; that the girl stood high; that the thing would not die out, and people would not let him alone; this was the last conversation witness had with McComas.

John Hopkins sworn—Was within two feet of the bar-room door when the shooting took place; saw it all after the first shot; saw the woman in the door; did not know who she was; thought she was crazy, and had escaped from a madhouse; did not know who she was shooting at, and got out of the way; her eyes were glaring, and her whole appearance was that of a raving maniac. Attorney-General Jones objected to taking the testimony of this witness as to the sanity of the sanity of the accused, claiming that under the law and precedents the opinion only of medical experts could be taken on such a point, and asked that this evidence be ruled out. After considerable argument, Chief Justice GEASON delivered the opinion of the Court that the opinion of the witness on the point could be received.

Witness had known Miss CAIRNES by sight for the last twenty years, but was silent in her company; had seen her at Bethel Church and on the road; had never spoken to her; did not know she was there on the day of the firing until after she turned to go back; only thought the woman was crazy because of her action at the time; knew nothing of her movements or actions before or since; if he had felt would not have altered his opinion—would still have thought she was a crazy woman. [At this point the court adjourned, and there was positive applause in the lobby.]

The cross-examination of this witness having been concluded, Mr. Archer stated that the defense had no further evidence to offer.

James Woods recalled by the prosecution—When Miss Cairnes came through the dining-room after the shooting, her brother said to her twice, "Come on here, and get on your horse."

Mr. Farnandis—What is the object of this?

Attorney-General JONES—To prove that her brother did not regard her as insane, but affirmed her to be a responsible person.

Judge JARRETT recalled by the prosecution—Did not see Miss CAIRNES ride off from the hotel; was asked by her brother to ride home with her; overtook her about a quarter of a mile from Jarrettsville, when she said: "I told him I would do it, and I have done it."

Charles Jones sworn: Is well acquainted with Miss Cairnes; known her for twenty-five years; Miss Cairnes, on the night of the 10th of April, came to his house alone with her infant in her arms; Miss Cairnes spoke in the usual way; the ordinary civilities passed between them; her manner did not strike him as being anything out of the usual way; had no idea that anything had happened; saw nothing in her to make him suppose anything had happened; her replies were just as sensible as they always had been.

Dr. George Archer called by defense—Has been a practising physician for twenty years; gave his opinion that the fact of the girl being collected and calm an hour or two after the occurrence would be no indication of soundness of mind, but rather the reverse.

The case was then closed on both sides. F. M. BURLEDGE, Esq., State's Attorney, commenced the closing argument on the part of the prosecution, first reminding the jury that with the alleged crimes and wrong doing of NICHOLAS MCCOMAS they had nothing whatever to do, but to vindicate the insulted majesty of the law. After reading from various authorities, he claimed that the killing of MCCOMAS was a deliberately planned and premeditated murder; that her brother, RICHARD CAIRNES, was accessory before the fact, and contending that the plea of insanity could not be sustained.

Herman Stump, Jr., Esq., on the part of the defence, then spoke of the pride which he felt in having been chosen as one of the defenders of innocence; that there was a written law,

NEWS OF THE DAY.

EUROPE.

The fluctuations in the London Money market are explained by the Times as due to the advance in the rate of interest in the Bank of England.

The Mayor of Cork, who has suddenly become so conspicuous in connection with the recent Fenian demonstration, has been offered a nomination for Parliament from the electors of Youghal.

There is still a talk of a change in the Executive of Spain. It is proposed to name SERRANO as Regent, with PRIM as President of the Council and War Minister. This arrangement would, of course, be provisional, and obtain only till a monarch is elected.

THE STATE LEGISLATURE.

In the State Senate, yesterday, the bill legalizing the New-York Central 30 per cent. scrip dividend, and the Railroad Consolidation bill, were passed. The votes by which the Broadway Underground and the Two-tier Railroad bills were rejected, were reconsidered, and the bills amended and passed. A Conference Committee was appointed on the Tax Levy, and at midnight had not reported. Mayor HALL sends a telegram from Albany in regard to these levies. He says that the levy, irrespective of bonds issued mainly for City improvement and judgments, are in excess of last year's only about $350,000; and that after providing for the interest on the bonds authorized by the levies and deducting the amount provided for by tax relief bonds, the new taxes are estimated in the aggregate at about twenty-one and a half millions, and are then two millions and a half less than last year. He says that the rate of tax will probably not exceed two and a fiftieth per cent., while it was two and a sixty-ninth last year.

GENERAL.

Señor SATRUSTEGNI, the Spanish Consul, had an interview with Marshal BARLOW yesterday afternoon, and gave him important information about Cuban movements in this City, requesting to prevent the departure of a war expedition which is now being prepared. The Marshal has received instructions from the State Department to use every precaution toward preventing any war vessel from leaving this port. About 200 Cubans departed on the German steamer Bremen yesterday, it is thought with martial intentions.

Intelligence from St. Domingo to the 18th of April is received by mail. The people of all parties are said to be anxious for annexation to the United States. Hostilities against the Dominicans have been suspended, and the people are represented in complete harmony with the administration of President BAEZ.

The Peruvian Minister, Señor F. A. GARCIA, took his farewell of the President yesterday. He expressed his admiration for the institutions of the United States, and expressed a fervent hope that amicable relations would continue to prevail between the two countries.

A financial statement was presented to the Canadian House of Commons last night. There is a balance in favor of the Dominion on the receipts and expenditures of the last nine months; and the estimates of the coming year likewise exhibit a surplus of about $950,000. No reduction, however, is suggested in customs or excise.

Chief Justice CHASE has ruled that the Government cannot collect income tax from foreigners who hold our bonds, and that what has been collected must be refunded. The Internal Revenue Bureau is preparing to carry out this decision; and several hundred thousand dollars will come out of the Treasury in consequence of it.

Woman suffrage has at length gained a definite standpoint in Massachusetts. On Friday, the Legislative Committee agreed by a vote of 9 to 1, to report an amendment to the State Constitution extending the privilege of voting to women.

A Charleston paper states that a citizen of New-York has bought the Snow's Island plantation, on Great Peedee for $13,000 cash. This is a historic spot; and famous as the almost inaccessible camping place of MARION, during the War of the Revolution.

The working-women of Boston have at length organized a league, among the objects of which are to educate women until their labor shall be as valuable as that of men, and to secure an equality of wages between the two sexes. The Women's Club in Boston has been for some time making inquiries with regard to the work and wages of women in that city, and some of the statistics thus gathered were used at the recent Convention of Working-women.

A boy has been tried and fined, through the efforts of an agent of the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, for overdriving sheep.

The Railroad Committee of the Cincinnati Common Council yesterday received the projectors of the various railroad routes through the Southern States, and listened to the details of their plans. A great deal of enthusiasm and a spirit of enterprise appears to prevail on this subject.

A private dispatch received in Washington on Saturday stated that Ex-President JOHNSON would be at the capital some time this week.

An injunction has been issued by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts to prevent the erection of the Soldiers' Monument in Cambridge, and the work was suspended on Friday.

A man named STEEL was drowned in a tank of oil on the line of the Alleghany Valley Railroad on Wednesday last. He was sent to examine the tank, and it is supposed that the gas escaping from the liquid overpowered him, and that losing his balance he fell in.

There is considerable danger of a crevasse below the City of New-Orleans, the Mississippi having risen to nearly its highest point in that locality.

A nolle prosequi will probably be entered on the remaining indictments against State Auditor WECKLIFFE, of Louisiana, charged with misdemeanor in office, a verdict of not guilty having been returned on the second indictment, which was considered the strongest of them.

Cotton was quiet but steady on Saturday. Breadstuffs were less sought after. Flour, Wheat and Corn were cheaper. Provisions dull and heavy. Groceries less freely dealt in. Refined Petroleum in brisk request. Freights quiet.

Mr. GEORGE WALKER, President of the Third National Bank of Springfield, Mass., has been appointed by Governor CLAFLIN a special agent for the sale of Massachusetts bonds in Europe, and will sail for England on the 19th inst., in fulfillment of his commission. The amount of scrip authorized to be issued under existing laws is upward of $5,000,000, but the present wants of the Treasury are much less, and all that this agency is expected to accomplish will be done if a million or two of the State bonds are sold in London, and measures taken for future sale, on advantageous terms, of additional sums.

The Mrs. ROWLAND who has been on trial at Cumberland, Md., the past week for the murder of her husband, HENRY ROWLAND, has just been acquitted. An indictment is still pending against her for the alleged poisoning of Mr. ROWLAND. The victim in this case, a well-to-do farmer, was murdered in his sleeping room in October last. As has before been stated, a negro named CARROLL is implicated.

Pious Frauds and Social Vampires.

We submit to the Mayor and the City Marshal, who have been active in warning the public against the gift enterprises and dollar stores and the spirit-photographers, that there are other fields of labor not yet exhausted, and we hope they will not tire of the good work of crushing them out. There are, however, other species of fraud not less obnoxious, and against which only public sentiment can make successful warfare; and on the expression of that public sentiment, which is almost always in the right, we must depend for a correction of these abuses.

Prominent physicians and others have lately called attention to the fact that the Coroners, Coroners' deputies, and a certain class of idle men who act on Coroners' juries in this City and Brooklyn, have formed a "ring" for making money out of inquests. The charge as made was very general, and hence in some measure unjust and exaggerated, as all such charges are apt to be, but in one or two specified instances the evidence fully substantiated the charge. The modus operandi, as revealed in these statements, is something as follows: Certain members of the "ring," who might be not inaptly termed vampires or jackals, carefully examine each day the lists of deaths published in the daily papers, and also the certificate book in the proper department for issuing certificates of burial. They thus become aware of the name and address of deceased persons, the certified causes of death and the appointed hour for burial. If the cause of death affords the slightest excuse for an inquest, a jury is ordered from the "ring," and an inquiry is made at a cost to the City of $40 for each inquest held. In many cases this inquisition is wholly unnecessary and an outrage on the family of the dead. Thus an inquest was lately held on the person of an elderly gentleman who had died while under the care of a distinguished physician of high professional standing and acknowledged ability, from the effects of a fall on the ice more than twelve months previously. Other glaring instances of this kind of fraud are numerous. A late horrible improvement on it is intended to blackmail the family of the subject as well as swindle the City. The jury of vampires are subpœnaed to appear at the late residence of the deceased a few minutes before the hour appointed for the funeral services, and they can only be got rid of by the payment of a fee by the family, or, as in one of the cases reported, by the firmness of the family physician in refusing the Coroner permission to examine the body after the certificate of burial had been issued.

No sooner, however, has the vampire Coroner been avoided than another is encountered in the person of the undertaker. A metropolitan funeral is one of the most horrible spectacles which can be imagined. It is either all indecent display, as in the case of the prominent and wealthy, or indecent haste as in the case of the more humble. No Wall-street speculator's coup flashes through the streets with greater haste than the hearse of the undertaker. We have heard undertakers declare that they avoided Broadway on week days because of the impossibility of "making good time," but on Sundays, when the great thoroughfare is comparatively open, the races of the hearses are frequent and (to the drivers, apparently,) highly exciting. Presuming on the patience of grief and the natural reluctance of the bereaved to dispute the last expenses of the deceased, the undertaker never fails to make his bills as large as possible.

Another species of annoyances is of very late invention. Some lady, whose name we cannot recall, has discovered a means of preserving natural flowers in all their freshness of look, though not of smell; and she has offered her services to the public, with a view of preserving the decorations of the dead. This would all be well enough, and many persons would be glad to employ her art, and call in her aid, if it were not for the fact that she employs the most painful and offensive methods of tendering her services. She employs herself in a daily examination of the lists of deaths in the papers; and circulars, announcing the advantages, beauties and cheapness of her peculiar art, are sent, in large numbers, by mail, addressed to the persons who, by their relationship to the deceased, are thought to be most afflicted. It is a most painful and unwarrantable intrusion on the sacredness of private grief, and justifies us in ranking this gentle but indiscreet flower preserver among the social vampires.

And then, last of all, but not least in the display of offensive taste and ill-judged manner, comes the minister. Nine-tenths of the funeral sermons of the present day are made up of addresses to the bereaved, calculated, and apparently intended, to harrow up their feelings. Funeral sermons are looked upon as successful only in proportion to the sensation produced on the mourners and friends who are present. Eulogiums of the most florid style are pronounced on the dead; appeals of the most pathetic character are made to the survivors; and solemn and beautiful death is surrounded, as far as the injudicious minister can do it by words, and the undertaker by display, and the other vampires by officiousness, with all that is horrible and outrageous. When shall we have more privacy, less display and less talk at our funerals? When shall they be at once simple, silent and solemn, as they ought to be, and once were, in the primitive ages, when fashion did not dictate either the cut of our sables, or the decorations of our dead?

The Flood-Tide of Immigration.

The cry is still they come. Probably never in the history of this country have there been such indications of enormous immigration as now. From all parts of Germany, particularly from Prussia, and from all parts of Great Britain, and particularly from Ireland, the news is that peasantry and mechanics are emigrating to America in numbers unprecedented. Bremen and Queenstown are filled with them, and the steamships and packets are unable to accommodate those who apply; the companies raise their rates, they charter other boats, but they do not succeed in checking the pressure of passengers.

Precisely to what cause this great westward movement is due it would be difficult to say. Probably it must be accounted for in various ways. First, the knowledge of the new naturalization treaties has been spread far and wide, and the old hereditary fears and restraints regarding the renunciation of allegiance have disappeared. Next, the conviction has become fixed that America has at last settled down to a state of peace, and renewed her march to prosperity and national greatness—a matter on which the election of General GRANT (who is an object of unalloyed admiration in Europe, his fame being unaffected there by partisan clamor,) has exercised no small influence. Again, the great internal improvements at the West, and particularly the Pacific Railroad, are bruited abroad. And, finally, the prospects of European war and the unsettled state of European politics and society, drive out the laborers and the middle classes from the fear of conscription. Thus from one cause and another, and from many combined, the tide of immigration is swelled. So long as those who come are good citizens, the more the better; for "Uncle Sam is rich enough to give them all a farm.'

The Success of the Hungarian Radical Party.

The new Hungarian Diet was opened by the usual address from the throne. It appears that FRANCIS JOSEPH fully appreciates the critical nature of the internal affairs of the Empire. Ideas are very slow in entering the brain of a Hapsburgher; yet the descendant of MARIA THERESSA is found invoking, not the loyalty, but the liberal principles of his constitutional subjects, and urging on the reforms favored by the Liberal Party. There is no enthusiastic shout in response of feudal or barbaric loyalty' but the address is received with respectful approval. The Hungarian Monarch says wisely that "there is much important legislation to be accomplished," and that "the internal reforms of the country require the concentration of the entire power of the nation, and the good sense and moderation of the people." He congratulates the people on the peaceful relations between Austria and the other Powers of the world. He urges, in conclusion, on the representatives the duty of carrying out the important reforms which have been promised.

The King—no longer the "Emperor"—of Hungary, well understands that he is speaking to a cold, if not a hostile Parliament. Contrary to the general expectations, the recent elections developed in Hungary proper a very strong Radical or anti-Austrian feeling. The middle, or Deak Party, have been increased by no means in proportion with the Kossuth or ultra-Hungarian Party, while the gain for the Imperial section is almost entirely in the Slavonic or non-Hungarian Provinces. The great and energetic centre of the people—the agriculturists of the interior plains, the old Magyars, both gentlemen and peasants, are evidently drifting toward the position held so long and obstinately by KOSSUTH, that the Austrian Empire must become Hungarian or nothing. They feel all the vigor and ambition of a separate nationality, they have the traditions of a thousand years of history, and the political education of ancient constitutional government, and abundant material resources for sustaining an administration, with no sympathy for the Germanic population beyond the Danube and an utter hatred of the House of HAPSBURGH. They accordingly aim and struggle toward a separate Hungarian nationality' whether under a monarchy or a Republic. The late election shows their power and numbers. Even the wise and able leader of the moderate party may be forced yet into their current, or find himself without a following. For the whole drift of European affairs is in that direction. The aggressive and leading State of Europe, since Sedowa, is North Germany, or Prussia. Her conquests are by no means ended. South Germany and the German Provinces of Austria must inevitably fall into the great Confederacy' Even a war with France would only hasten this drift. The German subjects of Austria have no desire to be the second in a Hungarian State. Language and history and prejudice carry them toward Germany. Moreover Austria is damaged in prestige, weak in finances, and with discordant populations. Her Bohemian provinces have no especial love for the House of HAPSBURGH, though also none for the HOHENZOLLERNS. When the old Empire disintegrates, they would inevitably fall into the hands of Prussia.

The Hungarian Radical Party see this, and are evidently aiming to make Hungary the head of the Empire, and eventually to merge Austria into Hungary. Their great obstacles are the Slavonic and non-Hungarian populations, such as the Wallachs, the Raizen, the Silesu, and the Border people. But though these are important in numbers, they have no coherence nor unity; they have not the vigor and constitutional education of the Magyars, and they are poor and unwarlike.

The Emperor is using every effort to secure their votes. The military discipline of the "Borders" is entirely removed; he travels among these populations and is entertained by them; and they have sent thus far members to the Parliament devoted to his house. But once mingled with the Magyars in political life, they will probably soon succumb to their influence.

The great hope, however, for the Emperor, is in that wealthy and influential middle class throughout the Empire, who dread great changes—that class who have so often saved the crown in crises as hopeless and dangerous.

It will be an interesting spectacle the next few years to see the peaceful struggle in the old Germanic Empire between the modern forces of Liberalism and nationality, and the power of an ancient and feudal house, vainly trying to preserve its historic influence and position.

New Sidewalk Obstructions.

The fine weather of May has brought out one more species of sidewalk obstructions, reminding us that Summer days are at hand. We do not mean now the pop-corn and peanut stands; nor the cellars excavated for new buildings; nor the piles of bricks and rubbish from old buildings. We refer to the itinerant peddlers who, by their rare oratory and the merits of their astonishing wares, collect gaping crowds around them, and so block the sidewalks to way passengers.

One of these street orators perhaps has a wondrous tooth-wash, and may be seen with a boy's head under his arm, and his gums laid bare, in order to show gentlemen, by ocular proof, how the wash works. Another has an astonishing soap to sell; a third cries a cement from his gig in the street. Whatever the merchandise, these curb-stone orators, at least, possess the art of drawing an assembly; and the greater their skill, the greater the nuisance. We do not like to object to "honest callings;" but on the other hand, neither do we like to be turned into the street because the sidewalk is occupied by some Orator Puff's customers.

England and Russia in Asia.

The English are claiming a great diplomatic triumph over Russia in the very quarter in which Russian and English interests come most directly in opposition. After having so thoroughly repressed the Bengal mutiny of 1857, and proved at the same time the adherence of many of the most powerful native Princes, and the fidelity of several of the most hardy and warlike races in British India' the only danger which England had to dread with regard to her Eastern possessions, sprang from the slow but certain advances of Russia in Central Asia. Anglo-Indians were divided into two classes—"Russo-phobists," who prophesied that in less than half a century England would be driven from India by Muscovite legions, and men of the old school—men imbued with the traditions of WARREN HASTINGS and CLIVE—who scoffed at all dangers and ridiculed the base idea of Russia ever reaching the British frontier. The former class again was divided into two parties—those who wished to frustrate the projects of Russia by an aggressive policy—going forward to meet her—and those who deemed it wiser to fall back on the natural frontiers of British India and await her coming. Since the recent successful campaigns of General ROMANOFFSKI in Toorkistan, it has been evident that England would be absolutely compelled to adopt a definite policy, one way or the other, with regard to "Russian aggression." Afghanistan, the only remaining Power intervening between British territory and that virtually owned by the Czar, was the spot to which the eyes of all concerned were directed. The least apprehensive of Englishmen admitted that if Russia were to conquer Afghanistan, or to place her own nominee on the throne, England would be always liable to a certain amount of danger on her northwestern frontier, even if her Indian supremacy were not directly threatened. The recent internal dissensions in Afghanistan brought matters still more pressingly to a crisis. The late Viceroy, Lord LAWRENCE, took a firm stand on behalf of one of the rival aspirants to the throne; and the Russian Government exerted all its power on the part of another, who seemed for a short time to be triumphant. But British influence proved the stronger; SHERE ALI has been reinstated on the throne of his ancestors, accepted the offer of a subsidy of six hundred thousand dollars a year from Calcutta, and has recently advanced five hundred miles into British territory to meet the Earl of MAYO, and to exchange assurances of friendship with the representatives of Queen VICTORIA.

It is evidently with great satisfaction that England regards this apparent removal of a disagreeable source of anxiety. There does not seem to us any evidence that Russia ever contemplated so gigantic an undertaking as a war with England in the East, at least for another century to come, or until she or her allies should have obtained command of the sea and closed the overland route against England. In the meantime, the possession of Central Asian trade and employment for her Generals have, we believe, been her great objects. But still the bare idea of danger in India excites grave apprehensions in the minds of English statesmen. England feels that she must hold India at all costs, and that a defeat or humiliation in India would be equivalent to her downfall from her present rank among nations. She would risk her all on the maintenance of her position in Asia. And if, as seems to be the case, the recently-concluded alliance between England and the triumphant ruler of Afghanistan will put an end to the apprehensions which have so long agitated Anglo-Indian officials, it will be an unmixed benefit to India. England can then afford to reduce her enormous military force in the East, and a greater portion of the Indian revenue—which amounts altogether to little less than two hundred and fifty millions of dollars—will be thus placed at the disposal of the Indian Government for employment on railways, irrigation, native education and other means for the material and moral development of one of the most magnificent countries in the world, inhabited by not far short of one-sixth of the human race.

A Lesson from Mormonism.

Mormon statistics show most conclusively what can be done by colonies going to the West, with energy, enterprise, industry, and the spirit of coöperation to help them. Once a mere handful of adventurers, within a score of years the Mormons have grown to be a people more than 100,000 strong, living in more than 100 beautiful towns and villages, and possessing all the appliances and comforts of complete civilization. They have all sorts of mills, factories, foundries and workshops; all trades flourish with them; they have fine and productive agriculture, and raise cattle that are famous. They have long fed the mining populations around them with the products of their farms, and have fashioned out of their mountain home the "garden of the West."

But we have the testimony of competent observers that there are scores of regions in the Territories far more fertile, and far more favored by nature for colonial growth than Utah. These will soon become known to all our people, with the steady stream of transcontinental traffic and travel, which may now be expected. The consequence will be the multiplied repetition of the Mormon experiment—minus polygamy.

MINOR TOPICS.

The kings are in a very uncomfortable condition just now,—or were so very lately. VICTOR EMMANUEL was put in peril of his life by a quantity of stones piled up with lethal intent at Foggia, on the railway he was traveling over, near Naples, and the King of Hawaii underwent a like danger from the dropping of a cocoanut on his head. At the same time we hear of the King of Hanover making a melancholy protest against the seizure of his appanage by the Prussian Government; while, at latest accounts, the King of Spain, whoever he may be, was sitting somewhere with the tantalizing mask of a Directory drawn over his lineaments.

We have all been accustomed to hear about the celebrated "Mutual Admiration Society" of the American Athens, but a writer in the Pall Mall Gazette has found quite as expressive a phrase to characterize the multitude of empty scientific, literary, artistic and other associations of dilettanteism with which Europe abounds. Speaking of a clever little satire on the medical literature so prevalent of late, which, in a very apt way, sets forth many absurd and contradictory merits of a certain Utopian watering place on the Mediterranean called "La Ville de Doux Repos," the reviewer says it was written by "Doctor CHARON, descendent of the well-known ROCHER D'OUTRETOMBE, and member of various societies of reciprocal laudation." Plain English is very harsh treatment for the little affectations of life.

On the Pope's jubilee-day, April 11, he received congratulations and presents from all the sovereigns and millions of the people of Europe. In the afternoon he gave audience to more than 5,000 persons in the upper atrium of St. Peter's. To them he discoursed, as is the fashion of the day, on religion and politics. He, Head of the Church on Earth; they, its deputed representatives from every part of the world. He still proclaimed his infallibility as dispenser of the Truth, but, in an elegant outburst of feeling, seemed to suggest that the Holy See is losing all hope of maintaining the temporal power so long and so tremendously wielded, and is looking forward to even greater triumphs as a centre of spiritual influence.

"O Rome!" he cried, "the ancient mistress of the Pagan world—even modern Rome, which succeeded, and which saw ranged before her the Powers of the world in their splendor, authority, and might, tendering respect and submission—this Rome I seek in vain, and perceive no more. My Rome I behold in yourselves, in your eyes and in your hearts, and in the hearts of all those who look with you toward this centre of unity, of truth, and of strength, disposed to make every sacrifice for its honor and defence."

And, indeed, this somewhat figurative passage contains more fact than most of the "allocutions" and "syllabuses" of late years have done.

Mr. LEWIS LEEDS has attained an enviable reputation as a man who talks good sense on the subject of ventilation. When he writes, it is generally something worth reading. We find in the May number of the Manufacturer and Builder, a paper from this gentleman containing a hint to be pondered. He says:

"Few persons who have not made a general investigation of this subject have any conception of the very large number of fires in daily use that are either entirely choked or totally inadequate to carry off the gases and smoke from the fires which they are intended thus to relieve; hence the very frequent annoyance from gas and smoke daily met with."

Now, as these are the days when the musical gadel of the chimney-sweep is heard in the land, we suggest that the voice of that charmer be listened for and his services obtained; particularly as Mr. LEEDS further records his belief that poorly constructed and entirely choked flues are the cause of more sickness and deaths in the United States than cholera, yellow fever, and small-pox combined, which is rather strong talk, but doubtless "founded on fact."

Bound to be ahead of the world in everything, the Californians are now in glee over a new invention in velocipedes. The four-wheeled machine is comfortable, the three-wheeled more convenient, the bicycle seems to need a marvel of skill and confidence to manage, but a resident of San Francisco has invented a one-wheeled velocipede, which he claims is as easily balanced, longitudinally and laterally, and more easily worked than any of the others. The only improvement left would be to go without any wheels—but that would be returning to first principles, and so will hardly be patented.

The Débats (Paris) is a very plain-spoken journal. Commenting on the new law lately adopted by the Italian Chamber, (and with the significant majority of 225 votes to 25,) abolishing the exemption from military conscription of young men studying for the priesthood, it says that in France, where the State considers priests as public functionaries, the twofold duty of religious and military service cannot be expected of them. But when the ecclesiastical profession becomes a free career, open to all, there is no reason why young citizens in the priesthood should have any special exemptions. And it closes with this rather stinging argument:

"We are told that the barrack-room is not a very excellent school of preparation for young men aspiring to the priesthood. That, indeed, is true; but neither is the barrack-room a good place for forming physicians, lawyers, merchants or artists; and yet the State does not think proper to accord any sort of exemption to students who frequent schools of law, medicine or the fine arts. A free Church in a free State is a formula devoid of sense, unless it means a living Church, developing itself in its own sphere under the empire of the common law, without privileges or favor, demanding nothing from the State, and supported by it only in the exact ratio of the protection due to all citizens."

In the era of discussion on Free Trade and Protection, upon which we seem entering, it will be well for all parties to give up at the outset the idea of any scheme which will be perfect, either in principle or practice. The best attainable good is for the present the best good. JOHN STUART MILL says:

"Free Trade is not upheld by any one who knows human life from any very lofty estimate of its worth, but because the evils of exclusive privilege are still greater, and, what is worse, more incurigible."

We can certainly speak of the evils of privilege; the evils of free competition may be worth risking.

The democratic tendency of things in the United Kingdom is making the privileged orders very uneasy. They have an idea that their land properties in Ireland will be shortly dealt with like the Church establishment in that country; and Lord SALISBURY has been asking Ministers if they intend to let the Irish have easier access to the possession of the soil. Lord GRANVILLE's answer was a very ominous one—that he could not, then, open the question, but that the subject would be introduced next session. Property and Labor are, in fact, coming face to face in the old Kingdom. The rights of the former will be respected, of course; but the rights of the other will also make themselves heard, till the resources of the soil shall be more equitably distributed in society. A privileged aristocracy must, in the end, give way to the rational demands of the industrious people there, as is the case everywhere else.

Boston has no longer an advantage over Constantinople. The latter metropolis has also had its shock of earthquake; and it was a rather more pronounced and agitating one than that of the Tri-Mountain Peninsula—having been felt on both sides of the Bosphorus. But the Fourth of July will transfer the prestige or distinction back again; for there is no probability that the Sultan will have a jubilee of a thousand musical performers in his capital.

The Moscow Gazette criticises the proposition of the English Ministers that Afghanistan and the adjacent Khanats be made neutral territory between the advance guards of England and Russia, and comments on the theatrical reception of SHERE ALI by Lord MAYO, the Governor-General, and on the pension granted to that potentate. The Golos of St. Petersburg says very plainly that the commercial rivalry with England in Central Asia may become a military rivalry, "in which case the rifles presented to SHERE ALI would stand him in good stead." The movement beyond the Indus and the Himalayas is looked on as a great piece of impertinence by the Russians, who think the English ought to be satisfied with the peninsula.

St. Petersburg is beginning to look awake on the Church Union question. A learned Russian, M. HOMIAKOF, has issued a pamphlet on "Western Creeds," in which he says:

"Three voices are making themselves distinctly heard in Europe on the Church question—the voice of Rome, which says, 'Submit yourselves and believe in my decrees;' the Protestant voice, which says, 'Be free, and strive to create some sort of religion for yourselves;' and the Greek voice, which says to all her children, 'Let us love one another and serve God in unity of faith.'"

The ancient schism between the Roman and the Greek Churches is made the topic of long and interesting discussions in the newspapers, Protestantism being regarded generally as a kind of offshoot from Romanism. The Golos in setting forth the simple Christianity and practical good sense of the Greek Church, says:

"Until now it has never known an inquisition like that of the Church of Rome, nor a fanatical Jesuitical propaganda; neither is there in the history of the Greek Church a single instance of the hierarchy grasping at that temporal power which has always been the principal object of the Catholic hierarchy. The Eastern Church has always striven to place itself on a harmonious footing with the Government, and has never attempted to interfere with any of its decrees; it has always been a support to the Government, and has in turn enjoyed its full protection."

And so it goes. Each one proclaims its desire for unity—on its own basis. They never seem to realize that each tub is intended to stand on its own bottom; and that the only practical "unity" they can ever attain is for all to be good, honest tubs. But so it is.

The talks of the Fruit-growers' Club in this City have always something of interest, as when, for instance, Mr. CARPENTER gives the pleasant promise that Missouri, in the future, will send us fresh strawberries several weeks before Jersey, and when General TOCKMAN of North Carolina, shows how superior the South can be to the Northwestern States in the production of cereals—giving facts out of the census, which we must of course accept. He gave a glowing account of Virginia, and her varied resources, and her wish to have an incursion of industrious Northmen; declaring in reply to some objections, that the Virginians had no antipathies against them. Generals CARRAL and IRWODNE spoke to a like effect and made statements which we cheerfully accept—without that "grain of salt" which harder logicians would be disposed to suggest. It is a very good sign of the times when the people of the Southern States try to retrieve matters in this way.

Well, well, what next? The English have invented a little arrangement, called the "Parliamentary Barometer," in which are recorded the votes, or pairings or abstainings from voting, indulged in by each member of Parliament. It is a little book, whose pages are tabulated with longitudinal columns, each headed by a number, which in the index refers to a given bill or subject of vote, and with lateral lines for the names of the unhappy men who are thus to be registered for ready reference. What a terrible weapon for an election fight! However, it doesn't make much difference with us how a man votes, so long as he is shrewd enough to get the "regular nomination."

LONDON, Saturday, May 8.

In answer to inquiries from the Associated Press of New-York as to the condition of the London money market, the following may be stated as a correct view of financial affairs here: The stock market has, within a few days, been influenced unfavorably by the increase in the rate of interest of the Bank of England to 4½ per cent., and the current belief that a further advance will be made shortly; to the political uncertainty occasioned by Senator SUMNER's speech; the exportation of gold; foreign loans, and the depressed state of trade.

Dispatches from Admiral Hoff—Spanish Generals on the March to Cuba—The Country Bristling with Field Works—Prevalent Destitution in Port-au-Prince—Salnave's Movements.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, May 8.

Dispatches were received this morning at the Navy Department from Admiral HOFF, dated off Havana April 30 and May 1. Since his last dispatch of the 27th ult., no further news of great importance from the interior has been received. On the 17th of April, 1,800 troops, commanded by Generals LETONA and ESCALANTE, arrived at Nuevitas from Villa Clara, and the day after General LESCA appeared at Nuevitas very unexpectedly with 1,350 men from Puerto Principe, having started with 2,200 and left a detachment on the road. They reported no resistance on the march, although large bodies of insurgents were posted on the high ground some distance from the road. Numbers of well-constructed trenches, breastworks, ditches, &c., were visible. The 4,000 men concentrated at Nuevitas, among them 1,600 Catalan volunteers, recently from Spain, were to commence operations on the railroad between Nuevitas and Principe immediately. About 1,600 started on the 23d, convoying provision trains. This expedition, under General LESCA, is to repair the road temporarily, get cars along, and provision the troops at Principe, who are said to be on half rations. It was reported that QUESADA, the revolutionary leader, purposely allowed the Spaniards to march without opposition from the interior to the sea-coast, but intended to obstruct their return, and, if possible, capture their provision trains. Dr. SIMMONS is still confined at Principe, accused of circulating insurrectionary proclamations, and giving aid and comfort to the rebels. General LESCA has stated that the doctor's life was spared because he was an American.

The Rear-Admiral forwards reports from Lieutenant-Commander T. H. EASTMAN, commanding the Penobscot, dated the 28th of April, at Cay Francis, the anchorage for the ports of Remedios and Caibarien. The prisoners taken from the Lizzie Major and sent to Caibarien had been released. The Spanish authorities at that place had offered no courtesies or facilities to the Penobscot, as is customary on the arrival of a foreign vessel—perhaps more from ignorance than design. The United States Consul at Caibarien had been informed by the Governor at Remedios that he must not hoist the flag of the Consular office again. In consideration of the condition of affairs in that country, where American citizens are holding over two millions of property and in fear of injury from the volunteer forces, Lieutenant-Commander EASTMAN has concluded to remain there for some days. A Cuban named S. B. VALLES, who claims to be an American citizen, was undergoing trial on charges preferred by the volunteer forces, and, it was expected, would soon be sent to Havana for sentence. The accused had no evidence with him of being an American citizen, but had written to the United States for it.

The Rear-Admiral had requested the Captain-General to allow the American flag to be hoisted over the Consulate at Caibarien.

Admiral HOFF forwards a report, dated April 1, from Commander T. ABBOTT, commanding the Yantic, of affairs in Hayti. Affairs seemed to be further from a settlement than when the Yantic was at Port au Prince several weeks previous. The currency, which was then at the rate of 120 gaurdes to an American dollar, had depreciated more than 300. It was reported that the populace were almost driven to desperation by the want of the necessities of life, and had threatened to pillage the town.

The English Minister and the Captain of H. B. M. frigate Doris had demanded and received an apology from President SALNAVE, for firing upon and seizing a British schooner and violating a mail bag addressed to the British Minister. A rupture was quite imminent for a time. Later advices report SALNAVE in possession of the cape on the north, but the people were in a starving condition. Everything in the neighborhood of Port-au-Prince was quiet. The Government Party (SALNAVE'S) was besieging Aux Cayes, that port, together with Jacmel and Jeremie in the South, and St. Marc in the North, being held by the Cacos, a party of the rebel faction.

The Murder Trial at Cumberland, Md.—Acquittal of Mrs. Rowland.

CUMBERLAND, Friday, May 7.

The jury in the case of Mrs. ROWLAND and the negro man CARROLL, indicted for the murder of Mrs. ROWLAND's husband, returned a verdict of not guilty. The jury was out about fifteen minutes. The victim in this case was murdered in his sleeping room on the night of Oct. 18, 1868, by having his skull crushed with some heavy instrument, and was so found. He was a well-to-do farmer, living about three miles from Hagerstown. An attempt was made to try the case in Washington County in March last, but on account of difficulty in getting a jury, it was removed to Allegheny County. Mrs. ROWLAND was a Miss GELBICKS, is about 26 or 27 years old, while her husband was 44, she being his second wife. She is delicate and modest in appearance. The negro man CARROLL is large and brawny, a dark mulatto and one-eyed, and seemed restless and uneasy in Court. The testimony in the case was not in any way direct. Mrs. ROWLAND was attended in Court by her father and mother.

The Southern Railroad.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Saturday, May 8.

Before the Railroad Committee of the City Council, in connection with the Advisory Committee of the Board of Trade and Chamber of Commerce, the representatives of the various routes for a Southern railroad presented the advantages of their respective lines, this afternoon. A large number of railroad men and capitalists from the South and this vicinity were present, and much enthusiasm prevailed. Great confidence is felt in the speedy completion of the Grand Trunk line from here to Chattanooga. Major R. HULBURT, of the Georgia State Road, showed the importance of Chattanooga as the terminus, it being the centre from which radiate seven Grand Trunk lines, either now complete or in process of construction, with the prospect of certain and speedy completion. Dr. HAGGARD, of Louisville, favored a line via Danville and McMinnville to Decatur, on the Memphis and Charleston Railroad. Mr. W. A. GUNN, of Lexington, represented the advantages of the Danville and Enemy River route to Chattanooga. W. J. HARAN advocated making Knoxville the terminus.

and said that that city would meet the road from Cincinnati at the Tennessee State line. C. SCHILL, of the Cumberland and Ohio Road, said that the connection between Cincinnati and Chattanooga via that road would be made. Governor BULLOCK, of Georgia, advocated a short-line connection with Chattanooga.

At 1 o'clock P. M. the meeting adjourned. The committees will convene again at the call of the President.

Reciprocity with the United States.

OTTAWA, Ontario, Saturday, May 8.

The following is a portion of the Finance Minister's Budget speech, of last night, in relation to reciprocity:

Before leaving this subject of our trade relations both with ourselves and with the United States, he might be permitted to say a word more with reference to reciprocal trade with the United States. We might fairly say to them we do not complain of the abrogation of the treaty; we have no fault to find with your Government for its action at that time; we know the peculiar difficulties in which you were then involved, and we know the state of public opinion which prevailed respecting us during the war, and for which our people and Government were not blamed; we believe that since you have formed juster impressions of our conduct toward you during the war, and that all irritated feelings have passed away, we have not since that time sought to retaliate; we have given you freely all the advantages possessed during the continuance of the Reciprocity Treaty; we make every allowance for the exceptional circumstances under which you abrogated the treaty; we have patiently, up to this time, given you every advantage you had before, and not sought, in any way, to enter upon a retaliatory course toward you; we have allowed you the free navigation of our canals and rivers, and the use of our own fisheries, by paying a mere nominal license, as an assertion of our right to them; we have not sought to interfere with the transmission of goods in bond across the Western Peninsula by an oppressive conduct such as you have imposed on us; we have allowed your flour, grain, hops, coals and other productions to come in free for the last three or four years; but you must understand we cannot go on with this forever. The time may come soon when we may require to have a national policy of our own, and that national policy will be stopped solely by those considerations which affect our resources. In entering upon negotiations for the renewal of this treaty, we ought to let it be unmistakably understood, that much as we desire, on national and commercial grounds, less restricted intercourse with the United States, we are not prepared to give up our national existence for it. We must then be equals, considering what is to be the material advantage of both countries, and for the promotion of free and kindly intercourse. There should be a distinct enunciation of opinions in this country; that no matter how much they may prevent intercourse with them, we are not disposed to pay the price for that intercourse by giving up our associations or our national existence. He had great faith in our ability to open up markets, which would relieve us from any temporary depression which may now exist. At one time it was supposed that England would be utterly ruined by the loss of the cotton trade with America, but we know that other markets were soon opened up, so that now less than 40 per cent. of her cotton comes from America. He did not desire to say more on this subject, but he thought we ought not to exaggerate the injury to the trade of this country, which he believed was only temporary, by the restrictions on trade with the United States. The time may come when this question may have to be considered in a more serious light; but this would be the time to do it when we find the people of the United States becoming disposed to open up negotiations. The Committee on Ways and Means at Washington had almost unanimously reported in favor of opening up negotiations; and that report had been unanimously adopted by the House of Representatives; and he believed that but for the extreme urgency of national affairs, this report would have been carried into effect.

THE PERUVIAN MINISTER.

Farewell Address to the President—Peru Anxious to Foster Useful Enterprise—Letter from the Peruvian Government.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Saturday, May 8.

On taking leave yesterday, Mr. A. C. GARCIA, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Peru, addressed the President as follows:

SIR: The President of Peru has been pleased to declare terminated the diplomatic mission which he had confided to me near the Government of the United States, and so informs your Excellency in the Cabinet letter that I have the honor of placing in your hands. One of the most earnest and constant aspirations of the worthy citizen who now presides over the destinies of Peru is the creation and development of useful enterprises, which shall bring the natural progress of our country to a level with her moral and intellectual growth, and enable her to participate in the great benefaction of this Government, the happy nation by the civilizing action of industry and of its political institutions. That laudable work, however, demands the aid of the intelligence and labor of the people of those countries who happily enjoy such great benefits, and which, I can assure you, would be amply rewarded by the proverbial munificence of our soil, and by the sympathy and gratitude of a hospitable and generous community. Seconding the elevated views of the Peruvian Government, and guided by the unwavering attachment which I entertain for your country, it has been gratifying to me, both in the discharge of my official duties and within the sphere of my private actions, to contribute effectually, not only in consolidating the friendship and harmonious relations now existing between Peru and the United States, but also in promoting under that new phase the development of ties which must tend to hasten the association of the capital and industry of your fellow-citizens with those undertakings recently initiated in Peru, which promise a glorious future. On withdrawing from the honorable post I have occupied, permit me, Sir, at the same time that I offer my heartfelt thanks for the very kind reception you have been pleased to give me, also to express the confidence I feel that those relations, so beneficial to Peru as well as to the United States, will in future have for their safeguard the greatness of your name, the justification of your Government, and the especial sympathy with which you have ever honored all the other Republican States of our America.

The President replied as follows:

Mr. GARCIA: It gives me pleasure at all times to hear of the prosperity and advancement of the Republican States in this hemisphere. Their progress and success encourage the expectation of the future extension of republican principles, and their adoption by other communities. As you are taking leave I shall hope that your successor may commend himself as much to the confidence of this Government, and be as careful of the cordial relations which now exist between the Government of Peru and of the United States as you have been in the discharge of the duties.

CABINET LETTER.

Jose Balta, Constitutional President of the Republic of Peru, to His Excellency the President of the United States of America:

Señor Don JOSE ANTONIO GARCIA-GARCIA, having ceased to pertain to the diplomatic corps, and having had the honor to exercise near your Excellency as Minister Plenipotentiary of Peru, I have come to determine to withdraw him from the exercise of the functions which he has discharged in your Republic.

On the leave-taking of this functionary he has it especially in charge to express to your Excellency my gratitude for the kind reception which, during his mission, you have designed to extend to him, and at the same time to reiterate to your Excellency the assurances of the sincere friendship of Peru for the United States of North America.

Be pleased, Sir, to accept the expression of the deep respect with which I am your loyal and true friend.

At the Government House in Lima on the 12th day of January, 1869. (Signed,) JOSE BALTA.

(Signed)—J. A. BARRENEXEA, Minister of Foreign Relations.

Nolle Prosequi in the Case of Auditor Wickliffe.

NEW-ORLEANS, La., Saturday, May 8.

The trial of Auditor WICKLIFFE upon the second indictment—the charge of misdemeanor in office, in issuing fraudulent warrants—closed at 10 o'clock last night, with a verdict of "not guilty." This was regarded as the strongest case against WICKLIFFE, and Judge ABEL this morning stated that in view of the result of the previous trials, and the disorganized condition of the State finances, he was prepared to entertain a motion of nolle prosequi on the remaining indictments against Auditor WICKLIFFE. The District Attorney, however, not being prepared, the matter was postponed until Monday.

The Congressional Election Investigating Committee commenced their investigations this morning with the First Congressional District.

The Mississippi is very nearly up to the high-water mark, and danger of a crevasse is reported below the city in St. Bernard Parish. Efforts are being made to close it, but they are apparently unavailing.

The American Medical Association adjourned yesterday to meet on the second Tuesday in May next. After the adjournment part of them made an excursion down the river, and a number of others took a short trip up the river on the steamer Richmond. The entire session was marked by the greatest harmony and good feeling, and closed with free expressions of appreciation for the hospitality and courtesy extended them by the community of New-Orleans, the various lines of travel and the Press generally.

THE PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Celebrations of its Supposed Completion—Congratulatory Dispatch from Philadelphia to San Francisco.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Saturday, May 8.

The entire force of workmen of MASON'S car manufactory in this city united this afternoon in the celebration of the opening of the Union Pacific Railroad. They formed a procession, headed by the Armory Band, and accompanied by the Union Battery, and marched from the shops of the Company through the principal streets of the city, each man bearing some tool or implement of his trade. Banners bearing "Our ears unite the Atlantic and Pacific;" "Four hundred car builders celebrate the opening of the Pacific Railroad;" "For San Francisco, connecting with fairy to China," &c., were conspicuous in the procession. MASON'S Company are now building fifty-two passenger cars and a large number of freight cars for the Pacific Railroad. The first through train for Sacramento left Springfield several days since.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., Saturday, May 8.

At a meeting of the Commercial Exchange held here to-day, Mr. J. H. MICHENER, President, called attention to the completion of the Pacific Railroad. The following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the President telegraph to the Merchants' Exchange of San Francisco as follows:

"The Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia sends greeting and extends to the Merchants' Exchange of San Francisco the right hand of fellowship from the iron arm this day completed from the Atlantic to the Pacific."

Flags were displayed to-day on all public and many private buildings, in honor of the completion of the road.

SAN FRANCISCO, Friday, May 7.

Dispatches from Promontory state that the Union Pacific are unable to complete their road before Monday, the 10th. The delay causes great disappointment here and at Sacramento, every preparation being completed to celebrate the event to-morrow in a befitting manner. Heavy rain-storms have interfered with the work, causing considerable damage to the track and bridges in the neighborhood of Echo City and Ogden. The celebration takes place at Sacramento and San Francisco to-morrow, (Saturday,) although the ceremony of joining the two roads is postponed until Monday noon.

Destructive Fire in St. Louis—Forty-five Horses and Mules Burned.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Saturday, May 8.

The livery stable of H. B. MILES, corner of South Fourth and Myrtle streets, was burned early this morning. Forty-five head of horses and mules were consumed. The loss is from $10,000 to $12,000. Dr. POPE'S Medical College on the west side of the stable was badly damaged, and the museum of the Academy of Science which was in this portion of the college building, and containing $20,000 worth of anatomical, geological and other rare specimens, was damaged to the extent of $15,000. A number of tenements in the vicinity were also more or less damaged.

The Elections in Virginia.

RICHMOND, Va., Saturday, May 8.

It is stated on good authority that General CANBY has fixed the first Tuesday in July for the election.

WASHINGTON.

The Finding of the Dyer Court of Inquiry—The Purchase of Five-Twenties—Changes in the Treasury Department—The Military Indian Agents—Personal.

Special Dispatches to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, May 8.

The finding of the Dyer Court of Inquiry has been received by the Judge-Advocate-General, and placed in the hands of the Secretary of War, who will place it before the President for his action. The opinion of the Court covers ten closely printed octavo pages, and, though its character has not been divulged, there is little hazard in saying that General DYER is exonerated from the charges preferred by the Ordnance Committee. The finding will not be made public until acted upon by the President.

THE PURCHASE OF FIVE-TWENTIES.

The instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury to Mr. VAN DYCK, with regard to the purchase of five-twenties for account of the Treasury, authorize the reception of proposals for any class of these securities. When the proposals are in, the Secretary will accept the offers of bonds of the class which shall seem the cheapest investment for the Government. He has not determined as yet whether the bonds so purchased shall be the initiation of the sinking fund, or whether they shall be permanently withdrawn and cancelled. This will not be determined until some future day. For the present the Treasury will continue to sell one million of gold and to buy one million of bonds per week without regard to the course of the money market.

NEW INDIAN AGENTS.

The military order assigning between fifty and sixty officers to duty with the Secretary of the Interior, who will be detailed to act as Indian Agents, will be published on Monday.

THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Hon. READER W. CLARKE, Third Auditor, A. B. MULLETT, Supervising Architect; and C. B. MCCLANEGAN, Chief of the Printing Division at the Treasury Department, this morning had a conference with Secretary BOUTWELL, and determined to remove the Third Auditor's office to the ground floor of the south wing of the Treasury building, and transfer the Printing Division to the third floor of the west wing, in the rooms now occupied by the Third Auditor. The object of this transfer is to have the engraving, printing, and money-making branches of the Department upon the third and fourth floors of the building, the fourth floor now being occupied for that purpose. This will obviate the necessity of sending packages of money, plates, &c., from one floor to another and avoid the risk of loss by embezzlement by being so carried. The work of removal will be commenced immediately, but will not be completed for some weeks, as several rooms must be reconstructed in order to accommodate the employes and facilitate the transaction of business.

DR. BOYNTON'S CHURCH.

Last evening the members of Dr. BOYNTON'S congregation assembled at the Fourteenth-street Baptist Church to hear the preparatory lecture to the communion service which takes place on Sunday afternoon next. There was a large attendance. Dr. BOYNTON, in the course of the lecture, referred to the action of the council recently held at the church as tyrannical, and not in accordance with the creed of Congregationalism. It was unfortunate that the members of that church had called for and received aid from churches at the North, for he had since been insulted, and through him his congregation, by having it said that they were beneficiaries of Northern churches. He congratulated his members on having thrown off the yoke by which they were burdened when connected with the church from which they had seceded.

PERSONAL.

Commissioner DELANO left for Ohio this afternoon on a week's absence, it being the first opportunity he has had since his entry into office for any relaxation whatever. A few days relief had become imperatively necessary. Mr. DOUGLASS, First Deputy, will act during Commissioner during Mr. DELANO'S absence.

Rev. J. H. WHALING, of Erie, Penn., has been appointed Consul at Port Mahon, Minorca, one of the Balearic Isles in the Mediterranean, under Spanish dominion.

V. A. HAWKINS, Esq., was to-day appointed Collector of the First New-York District in place of Mr. EVERETT, nominated last month and duly confirmed, but who failed to qualify to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. HAWKINS was once before nominated, but the nomination lapsed, and Mr. EVERETT was sent in his place.

Senator FENTON, of New-York, is expected in this city on Monday evening next.

Dispatches to the Associated Press.

Financial Policy of Secretary Boutwell—The Weekly Purchase of Government Bonds.

From the Evening Post.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, May 8, 1869.

When the fact became known this morning that Secretary BOUTWELL had dispatched orders to Assistant Secretary VAN WYCK, at New-York, to buy Government bonds to the amount of $1,000,000 per week, on the same plan by which gold is sold—by sealed proposals, after due notice by advertising—it led to much discussion among financial men.

This move on the part of Secretary BOUTWELL foreshadows clearly the policy which is to be pursued while he remains at the head of the Treasury Department. In conversation with our correspondent this morning he said it was his intention to have a policy which no one could misunderstand, and which would prevent the Department from being used to enrich speculators all over the country. When it becomes necessary to alter or change its present policy the fact would be made public either before or after the close of business hours, in order that no one should have a chance to take advantage over another through the fluctuations in the money market. In every case the information would be published before the officers charged with executing the orders have the official information as to the course they are to pursue.

The Secretary will act entirely according to the condition of the Treasury, and will determine his policy by the receipts and expenditures of the Department, and not from the condition of the money market in New-York or elsewhere.

If the receipts of Government justify it, bonds will undoubtedly be purchased in amounts larger than one million of dollars per week. It is the Secretary's purpose to hold these bonds as a sinking fund, and not to cancel them. He is strongly urged to change his order to buy bonds so far as to substitute three per cent. certificates in their place, but thus he positively refuses to do.

Unless something at present unforeseen should occur rendering a change absolutely necessary, it is the Secretary's intention to adhere closely to his present policy until the assembling of Congress next Winter.

THE STAGE.

Weekly Record of Local Amusements.

The week has not been at all animated. "Caste," it is true, was played at Wallack's on Monday evening, but its performance offered the only first night to the amateur of such events until the production of "Robinson Crusoe," which production was commenced yesterday, and was hardly finished until this morning, thus making extended comment upon the qualities of the pantomime-burlesque impossible for the present. The season days that have now been entered upon, however, will, to make amends for the dullness of past periods, teem with noteworthy incidents. Their close will be signalized by the representation of "Patrie" at the Grand Opera House. As M. SARDOU'S drama is the topic of the hour in France, England and Belgium, we may safely anticipate that its rendering here will cause at least a mild excitement among the few hundred persons for whom such an occurrence is a great event. "Patrie," of course, will elbow aside "The Tempest,"—a quieter work, in spite of its noisier title. In bringing out the latter poem, a succès d'estime was to be looked for, rather than a great pecuniary success. The succès d'estime was, of course, attained, and in a smaller theatre than the Grand Opera House, the other would have been achieved too. The receipts of the thirty-eight performances had, up to Friday, amounted to almost $29,000. Surely this is not indicative of a financial failure. Decidedly unlike modern spectacular pieces in this respect, though, it is doubtful if most revivals of the work secured affluence for the managers who confided in its attractiveness as a stage play. That there were many who did, a review of the past will show. Mr. KEMBLE revived it at Drury Lane with, what was then thought extraordinary magnificence, and assigned to himself the character of Prospero. He filled it, we are told, admirably, and his addressed reproaches to Caliban were especially dwelt upon by the critics of his time, as one of the strongest features of his performance. It was in this play that by his adherence to an old reading he gave offence to students and public, and led to a series of riotous demonstrations. In delivering the threat to Caliban,

"I'll rack the with old cramps;
Fill all thy bones with aches; make thee roar,"

Mr. KEMBLE pronounced aches as a word of two syllables, and was night after night, for a week or more, vigorously hissed by the gods of the galleries and the pit, until he was at last compelled to yield the point. In 1839 Mr. MACREADY presented the play at Covent Garden with a lavish expenditure of time and money. Its results did not justify his expectation any more than those of any of his Shakespearean productions, for with scarcely an exception all were pecuniary failures, and eventually brought him to bankruptcy. On that occasion Mr. MACREADY was Prospero; Mr. PHELPS, Antonio; Mr. JAMES ANDERSON, Ferdinand; Mr. GEORGE BENNETT, Caliban; Miss HELEN FAUCIT, Miranda. In 1857 Mr. CHARLES KEAN gave the piece in superb style at the Princess' Theatre, with a cast which included himself as Prospero, Mr. CATHCART as Antonio, Mr. GEORGE GRAHAM, the tragedian, (who died in this country some years ago,) as Gonzalo, Mr. RYDER as Caliban, Miss CARLOTTA LE CLERCQ (who supports FECHTER in his approaching engagement at the Grand Opera House,) as Miranda, and Miss KATE TERRY as Ariel. Mr. KEAN was very proud of the production, and it had—marvelous to chronicle!—a run of more than one hundred nights. In this country, in 1866, or thereabouts, Mr. HARRY PLACIDE produced "The Tempest" at the Varieties Theatre, New-Orleans, and with rather fortunate results. In 1863 Mr. BURTON had it at his Chambers-street Theatre, and it was then very successful. It was given with Mr. CHARLES FISHER as Prospero, Mr. GEORGE JORDAN as Ferdinand, Mr. BURTON as Caliban, Mr. HARRY PLACIDE as Stephano, Mr. T. B. JOHNSTON as Trinculo, Mrs. BURTON as Miranda, and Mrs. C. R. HILL as Ariel. A year or two later BURTON transferred "The Tempest," with all its Chambers-street effects, &c., to his up-town theatre, (the late Winter Garden,) but the scenery, &c., were ill adapted to so vast a house, and the piece ran for a few weeks only. In 1866 Mr. BARRY revived the work in fine style at the Boston Theatre, with Mr. E. L. DAVENPORT as Prospero, Mr. JOHN GILBERT as Caliban, Mrs. JOHN WOOD as Ariel, and Mrs. BARROW as Miranda. It proved successful, and enjoyed a a remarkably long run (for Boston) of twelve weeks. In 1868 "The Tempest" was again enacted at the Anti-street Theatre, Philadelphia. In 1869 Mr. WHEATLEY retired from the management of the Arch, and assumed control of the Continental Theatre, in Chestnut-street, near Ninth. Here he revived the piece with a grand transformation scene, then a novelty in this country. It was during that run of "The Tempest" that the GALE sisters and seven other ill-fated members of the corps de ballet were burned to death. The girls were imitating themselves for the transformation scene, when a drum suspended from the wall was fired by a jet near at hand. In the effort to extinguish it, the attire of one of the GALE sisters was reached by the flame. Her sister rushed to her and shared her fate. The two fled screaming into an adjoining dressing-room, where thirty or forty girls, all wearing the thinnest of dresses were assembled. These endeavored by climbing upon shelvings, tables, &c., and by squeezing from the window, to escape contact with their wretched companions who were actually perishing in their presence. To some extent they succeeded, but nine in all ultimately succumbed to the effects of the disaster. The three sisters GALE died the same night; their associates expired at intervals within the week. Of course, the accident dealt a final blow to the fortunes of the play and of the House. Since then the poem has been put upon the stage of the Holliday-street Theatre, Baltimore, by Mr. FORD, in 1868, and at Pike's Opera House, Cincinnati, by Mr. PIKE in 1869. When and where will it next be given? The future, which may be prolific in adventurous managers, may enlighten the younger readers.—At other City theatres, besides the Grand Opera House, there will be fresh pieces and new faces this week. Announcements to be made hereafter will allude to them in detail. Now a mere recapitulation of promises is all that can be made. "Dardine," by WILLIAM VINCENT WALLACE, will be sung, for the first time in this country, at the Academy, Wednesday. "Les Dragons de Villars," an exquisite opera comique, will be given at the Fifth-avenue Theatre to-morrow night. Mr. BOOTH'S Othello will again claim attention at SHAKESPEARE'S abode. Strange comedians will tenant the Waverley, and finally, elsewhere, the plays and players of the past will prosper, without needing critical discussion or commendation.

Town and Country.

A last-final-farewell performance—to use an expression from Mr. Vincent Crummles' playbills—of ROSSINI'S "Messe Solennelle" takes place this evening at St. Stephen's Church. Miss KELLOGG, Mme. TESTA and Signors BOSTI and ANTONUCCI, as heretofore, will be the soloists.

An interesting début will take place at Steinway Hall on May 20. Miss DORA HARRIS, a young American singer who is said to possess a voice of rare power, and also considerable culture, is then to appear for the first time in the concert room, assisted by THEODORE THOMAS' full orchestra and several popular artistes.

The death of Dr. R. F. JONES, a theatrical agent who will be remembered by most City playgoers, and that of JAMES MADIGAN, a well-known equestrian, are announced. Dr. JONES succumbed to the effects of an overdose of laudanum taken (opinions differ) by accident or by design. Mr. MADIGAN sustained a fatal injury on Wednesday week while performing in Paris, Ky.

Mr. and Miss MCKEAN BUCHANAN afflicted the theatre-goers of Binghamton, N. Y., last week. A local critic, who, however, does not share the general affection, thus refers to their sojourn: "Mr. and Miss BUCHANAN are certainly worthy of better patronage than they have received this week. We are sorry to admit the fact, but it would seem that SHAKESPEARE and the legitimate drama are at a discount in our city. The plays presented by Mr. BUCHANAN have all been of the highest order, and have been finely rendered in every respect. The opening drama ("Othello") we have already written of, and given our opinion as to its marked excellence. The following night Mr. BUCHANAN gave an equally good representation of "Richard the III.," the crooked back tyrant. From first to last it was a correct and life-like impersonation. Last night "Macbeth" was given, and the character of Macbeth by Mr. BUCHANAN stood out in bold relief—not a whit resembling either of the other impersonations." Astonishing versatility! Mr. BUCHANAN'S receipts in Elmira, N. Y., one night, a week or so ago, were $3!

Miss MARRIOTT enacted Pauline, in "The Lady of Lyons" in Newark, on May 7, Captain MORTON PRICE representing Claude.

Boston is promised another week of dramatic and musical novelties of a very interesting character. At the Museum, the new play called "Black and White," written by WILKIE COLLINS and Mr. FECHTER, is to be produced to-morrow. "Black and White" has been very successful in London. Its plot turns upon the discovery that its hero, Maurice de Layrac, instead of being a pure-blooded Frenchman, is the child of a quadroon slave. At Selwyn's, the charming play of "Ours," by Mr. ROBERTSON, is to be revived, with the cast of last year substantially unchanged. At the Theatre Comique, the pantomime of "Humpty Dumpty" is to be produced unchanged, the management announcing that no pains or expense have been spared for its effective and entertaining representation. At the Boston Theatre, "Rip Van Winkle" will keep the stage.

JOHN BROUGHAM, at the Walnut-street Theatre, the GALTONS, at the Theatre Comique, and LOTTA in a new play, "Pepina," at the Arch-street Theatre, occupied the Philadelphia critics last week. Apropos of LOTTA and her piece, the Press newspaper discourses with much fun—: "At the Arch," says the writer, "we have, what? The graduate of the Bella Union concert saloon, who has done nothing more nor less than changed what has been the first theatre in America into a low variieties saloon. The play "Pepina" is not worth a line. It is worse than bad—more than impossible. It causes the true lover of the drama to wish the door of every place of amusement closed forever, rather than that which is now being done at the Arch-street Theatre should ever be seen outside of a concert saloon. With the people, and not with either LOTTA or the management, rests the blame. The more vulgar, the more outrageous the conduct of this young girl—for she never acts—the more rapturous the applause. While excusing Mrs. DREW as much as possible for engaging this star, knowing that her seasons are always most successful, we ask, in all candor, is there nothing else which would bring in as much money? Let LOTTA find her level. Let those who will see her go and see her where her style of acting is always in vogue; but in the name of common sense, we call upon Mrs. DREW not to undo, for the sake of a few dollars, the much she has done to give respectability to the theatre. How can we continue to look upon the Arch as the theatre of America, if such plays as LOTTA gives take up its time six or seven weeks every year?" Savage, but not altogether uncalled for.

The Pittsburg, Penn., playgoers expended about $60,000 on theatricals during February and March last.

Mrs. LANDER is now at her home in Lynn, Mass., preparing for a speedy departure for Europe.

Miss LAURA KEENE and her company played in Hartford May 3.

The intended speedy reorganization of the Richings Opera Troupe is announced. Mr. A. W. PENNOYER is now in England seeking new artistes.

Mr. GRAU'S opera bouffe artists visit Cleveland this week.

Miss KATE REHNDLES has been acting at Wood's Theatre, Cincinnati. Mr. J. NEWROS GOTTHOLD appeared with her.

Mrs. SCOTT-SIDDONS, at latest news, was acting at the Detroit Opera House.

The Milwaukee critics are in ecstacy. One of them shouts: "At last the horizon looks theatrical. At last the clouds are breaking away and a gleam of theatrical sunshine is dawning upon us. Let us rejoice. A committee has been appointed to solicit subscriptions for changing Music Hall into a theatre. Some $20,000 is needed, and twice the amount can be raised."

The Baltimore Express announces the successful first performance at the Holliday-street Theatre, of Mr. GEORGE H. MILES' opera of "Abou Hassan." "The plot," says our contemporary, "was introduced with splendid accessories in the way of costumes, new scenery, &c., and the chorus was as full and complete as could be desired. Some of the songs were very charming and animated, and the music was generally pleasing. In the dialogue, Mr. MILES has been very successful, lifting it far above that generally employed in burlesque pieces, especially avoiding the small-wit puns with which they are too often overburdened. Altogether, there is a warmth, spirit and picturesqueness about the representation which make it peculiarly entertaining."

Miss LEO HUDSON has been unified in matrimony to Mr. JOHN ROBINSON, a resident of Vicksburg, Miss.

Mr. VINING BOWERS and Miss ALICE GRAY have both been the recipients of complimentary benefits at the New-Orleans Varieties. On May 1, when Mr. BOWERS took his benefit he appeared by general request as Major Wellington de Boots. Miss LAMBELE-ARESKINE is playing in New-Orleans. So are the WEXMELL sisters.

Before Foreign Footlights.

Little news is to be gleaned concerning the London dramatic world. No novelty of moment had been produced at any of the theatres. Gossip concerning new plays in Paris is scarce too; the production of HERVE'S new musical absurdity, entitled "Le Petit Faust," and that of "Le Roi Petaud," a three-act opera bouffe by M. LEO DELIBES, having been so recent as to have suggested as yet no critical comment. The Summer sensation was expected to grow out of the performance of Signor ERNESTO ROSSI, who was soon to bring a troupe to the Paris Italiens. He will play in the "Egmont" of GOETHE, and in the Strasburg of MICHEL BERR, brother of the author of "Le Prophete," and will fill besides principal characters of SHAKESPEARE'S tragedies. He will be accompanied by a young actress, Signora CASILINI, a grand-daughter of the celebrated ROMAGNOLI.

The Paris correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph comments on the sad fact that the celebrated and long appreciated FREDERIC LEMAITRE, who may be said to have created the role of Vautrin, that of "Thirty Years, or the Life of a Gambler," that of "Don Cæsar de Bazan," and of so many others, is still acting every night in Paris, although he is sixty-nine years of age. Far better would it have been for him, he thinks, to have withdrawn from the stage, for his talent is but the shadow of what it was. His fortune amounts to $19,000; therefore there is no imperative necessity for his continuing to work for his bread. He is still a curious character to study. He is as active, persevering, and obstinate as ever. The great defect of his voice is caused by the loss of his teeth, which he persists in refusing to have replaced. He regularly arrives in his dressing-room behind the scenes, accompanied by a young valet, three hours before he appears on the stage, and tries before a cheval glass the effect of those gestures which invariably excite the applause of the public. His servant brings with him four bottles of Bordeaux, which are emptied into a huge salad dish, from which LEMAITRE drinks as if it were a teacup. By the time 12 o'clock strikes the salad bowl is sure to be empty. The writer cannot say that FREDERIC LEMAITRE is seen to the best advantage in his own apartment. Whatever may be the state of the atmosphere, he walks about without trousers, and merely enveloped in a huge dressing gown. He lives at the Rue Béranger, on the second floor. Nothing can be more incongruous than the furniture of the rooms, partly magnificent and partly poor—slovenliness and splendor being in strange contact.

Criticism in the French metropolis is something fraught with danger. A fortnight ago, M. D'AUREVILLY, theatrical critic of the Nain Jaune, having said something which displeased Mlle. DUVERGER, an actress at the Gaieté, that lady called him out, and the duel came off on Sunday afternoon at St. Germain. Mlle. DUVERGER chose pistols, and at the first shot succeeded in carrying off one of the locks of hair which adorned her opponent's head. Her seconds, two actresses from the same theatre, then declared honor satisfied, and the party wound up the day by a dinner at the Pavillon Henri IV.

M. SARDOU, who a few years ago could not dispose of a play, received from two Parisian theatres only, for twelve days, author's rights to the amount of almost 14,000 francs. Those of his plays now being acted throughout the country bring him an average revenue of 200 francs a day.

ROBERT HOUDIN used to say that if the public knew what passes through the mind of a conjurer when he sees the barrel of a pistol turned toward him in the course of a "fire-arm trick," they would perhaps give him credit for as much nerve and courage as the bravest soldier shows in battle. An omission in some trifling point, the breaking off of a small part of the false ramrod or of the real bullet as it is being withdrawn, may make the discharge fatal. Often, too, the trick is a new one, and some miscalculation may make the plan a failure where failure may mean death. The unfortunate event which has just taken place in the Cirque Napoleon strikingly illustrates HOUDIN'S words. Dr. EPSTEIN, the conjuror, had offered a gun to a spectator, with directions to take good aim at the doctor, who was to receive the discharge on the point of a sword. The man refused, but another fired off the gun as directed. The moment after, the doctor staggered and fell to the ground, exclaiming: "I am a dead man!" Several persons hastened to his assistance, and a surgeon being sent for, the unfortunate performer was removed at once to his own residence. Naturally a great sensation was excited among the spectators, although few were aware of the full extent of the injury done. It appears that the slight piece of wood used in ramming down the charge had broken in the barrel, and that a piece of it had traversed Dr. EPSTEIN'S body, inflicting a painful, though not very dangerous wound.

M. VARIN, a popular dramatic author, has just died, at the age of seventy. He was the writer of about 150 pieces, mostly played at the Vaudeville, Variétés, and Palais-Royal Theatres. Among the best known was "Les Saltimbanques," in which FREDERICK LEMAITRE obtained one of his greatest successes.

In Berlin an order from the Intendant-General had enjoined the dancers at the opera to suppress their moustaches. The grievance seemed to them so serious that they addressed a protest to the king at once. His Majesty has the protest under serious consideration.

LISZT'S "Legend of St. Elizabeth," recently brought out in Vienna, seems to have been found tiresome even by the most ardent admirers of the great player. The subject, says a contemporary, offers a good canvass for effective musical painting, but the composer has missed his chances, and has been betrayed into excessive length. At the repetition of the oratorio it was considerably cut down.

The celebrated cantatrice, Mme. LUCCA, had been engaged at a salary of 48,000 francs per month for the fêtes to be given in Egypt at the inauguration of the Suez Canal.

The death is announced, at St. Petersburg, of ALEXANDER DAGONIESKY, a native composer, known by the operas "Russalka" and "Esmeralda." He has also left an incomplete "Don Juan," founded, like "Russalka," on a dramatic sketch by PUSHKIN, the Russian Byron. He was buried in the Cemetery of the Newsky Kloster, near the grave of GLINKA.

SATURDAY, May 8—P. M.

The following important special notice from the Treasury Department, for the purchase of United States Bonds or Registered Stock, for account and under authority of the Sinking Fund Act of Feb. 25, 1862, appeared to-day:

PURCHASE OF GOVERNMENT BONDS.—Proposals will be received at this office until noon of Wednesday, May 12, for the sale to the Government of one million of dollars of Six per cent. Five-twenty Bonds; at which time the bids will be opened and the awards declared. Proposals will state the specific character of the Bonds offered, whether registered or coupon, to which particular class they belong, as '62s, '64s, '65s, (old or new,) '67s or '68s, and may be for any amount not less than five thousand dollars. The offers must be for the sale of the Bonds "flat," and each proposal must inclose a certified check for five per cent. of the amount offered. The checks of unaccepted bidders will be returned as soon as the result is ascertained, and those of others on the following day, when the Bonds must be delivered, for which payment in lawful money will be made as soon as they can be duly examined. The right is reserved to reject bids adverse to the interests of the Government.

By order of the Secretary of the Treasury.

H. H. VAN DYCK, Assistant Treasurer.

The upward excitement in the Gold Room, and the depression in the Public Funds noticed on Friday, as resulting from the London Cable telegrams, were in good part recovered from to-day, although at the early opening of business in the Gold Room some important purchases were made at 139¼@½@¾@⅞ ₱ cent. on the first Cable from London. But the movement was soon reversed, and the sales of Gold subsequently fell off to 139@138¾@138@137¾ ₱ cent., and the Public Funds advanced rapidly to 116½@¾ ₱ cent. for the July and January 6-20s, and on other descriptions in nearly the same proportion, placing the quotations 1@1½ ₱ cent. above the lowest figures of Friday, and restoring the quotations close upon Thursday's last figures.

In Foreign Bills the sales were 109@109½ for 60 days' on London, and 109⅞@110¼ prime short sight. Our quotation of Friday afternoon for Cable transfers should have been 110¼ ₱ cent. in place of 111 ₱ cent. A transfer to Paris was made at the rate of 5 francs 11¼ centimes on that day. The cable advices to-day after 11 o'clock from London induced a much better feeling in Wall-street generally, and much of the alarm of Friday appears to have been unjustified by any financial or political event abroad, with the single exception that the price of money had suddenly advanced in London and Amsterdam.

In our own Money Market the week closes on an easy supply at 5 ₱ cent. Currency Interest, with numerous exceptions in the shape of offers to the leading firms of the Street, at 6 ₱ cent. until Monday on the Public Funds. The Bank return shows a large accession—$6,883,000—to the stock of Gold in Bank; nearly ten millions in the general line of Deposits; a partial loss (resulting from the Treasury sales of Gold) in Greenbacks of $1,386,000, and an addition of eight millions to Loans and Discounts. The Treasury Office paid out for Gold Interest during the week $4,974,818, and received for Gold Customs $3,000,000.

In other departments of the Stock Exchange than the Public Funds, the Southern State Bonds, and the New-York and Western Railways, the feeling was generally firm; and the panic sensation which appeared late on Friday afternoon having given place to a much steadier confidence, it will be noted in our closing quotations that New-York Central stands decidedly higher, and nearly all the Western lines better than at the termination of business on that day.

After 1 o'clock there was no regular business done in the Exchange, the brokers of the Old and of the Open Board being engaged in conference for mutual consolidation. Late in the afternoon the following Long Room and Street quotations were made, as compared with Friday night. The Public Funds made a further advance in the afternoon, and the whole list closed with much buoyancy, the bidding being for heavy amounts by two or three of the leading wealthy dealers, who are especially (and with good reason) jubilant over the recognition of the Sinking Fund Act of 1862 by the Secretary of the Treasury and his announcement that he will purchase a million of 5-20s per week until further notice.

CARD.
The Opera of Lurline was composed by the lamented William Vincent Wallace, in the City of New-York in 1860, and was represented at Covent Garden Theatre in 1861. The Opera was an immense success, and ran with unabated enthusiasm for upward of a hundred nights, and has since been continuously played in Germany and the continental English cities, with the same happy results. Various attempts have been made by managers in America to present Lurline to a New-York audience, but owing to the uncertain position assumed by the Opera, and the uncertain condition of operatic matters here, such attempts have never as yet been crowned with realization.
The management feel justified in stating that, thanks to the liberality and liberal cooperation of JAMES FISK, JR., Esq., the production of this delightful Opera, will become a fact accomplished, the first and only time possible in New-York, because enriched by yet another prize.
MR. JAMES FISK, JR., BEING THE PROPRIETOR OF THE MAGNIFICENT SCENERY, (PAINTED EXPRESSLY FOR LAST YEAR'S AT THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE FOR THIS PIECE,) has not only placed that extensive and very valuable property at the disposal of this company, but also furnished the most costly and gorgeous costumes and stage properties ever seen upon the American stage, and has further provided the means of securing a double Opera Company and a super

STARTLING FRAUDS.

Extensive Counterfeiting of Haytien Currency.

Nearly One Million of Dollars' Worth Manufactured in This City.

An Admiral and Other Haytien Officials Implicated.

Arrest of Three of the Suspected Parties.

A most gigantic fraud in the counterfeiting line culminated in the Tombs Police Court yesterday by the arraignment of three of the persons implicated in the case. In order that the reader may gain a comprehensive idea of this stupendous scheme of counterfeiting it will be necessary to give a history of the matter in its earlier stages.

During the Autumn months of last year Señor EVARISTE LAROCHE, the Haytien Minister and Consul-General at Washington, received intelligence from his Government at home informing him there was an immense amount of counterfeit currency in active circulation throughout the Republic of Hayti, and that there was reason to believe that the stuff was being manufactured in the United States. He was also requested to give the matter his immediate personal attention, with a view to secure the arrest and punishment of the offenders, as well as put a stop to the further manufacture of the currency thus unlawfully thrust upon the Haytian Treasury. Señor LAROCHE was also informed that, not only were the counterfeits made and prepared in this country, but suspicion was entertained that the prime movers or conspirators in the plot thus to deluge the island with spurious currency and depreciate the value of the genuine issue, were persons high in authority in the Republic of Hayti.

The Haytian Minister was naturally much exercised at this intelligence, and he, with great promptitude, left the national capital and placed himself in communication with Superintendent JOHN A. KENNEDY, of the Metropolitan Police. The frequent conferences held by these two gentlemen resulted in Detectives PHILIP FARLEY and JOSEPH EUSTACE, of the Headquarter Squad, being detailed to work up the case, with a view to making such arrests as might be deemed advisable.

The detectives entered upon their investigations about three months ago, Señor LAROCHE and his private secretary becoming domiciled at the St. Germain Hotel, in order to be near at hand in case of emergency and to aid the officers in their labors. Precisely how FARLEY and EUSTACE proceeded toward the detection and arrest of the guilty persons is not now known, as the detectives declined to give any inkling of their conduct in the matter. Detective FARLEY, indeed, gave two or three different versions to as many persons, so the case is, in that respect, wrapped in considerable mystery. It is understood, however, that the case did not vary much from the generality of those coming into the hands of the Headquarters Detectives, and that the leading clues were either furnished by the Haytian Minister himself or were "given away" by some person now preferring to be unknown. Suffice it to say that the detectives gained access to the confidence of one JOHN A. MANGET, residing at No. 66 Fulton-street, and learned from him that during the winter months, now just past, he had been employed in the printing office of Messrs. BRETT & JONES, at No. 89 Nassau-street. He stated that while in the office he had a conversation with Mr. WM. H. JONES, one of the partners in the firm, relative to a large quantity of notes in Haytian currency, which were then in course of preparation in the establishment. JONES had informed MANGET that he had received the job through the kind offices of Colonel WOOD, one of the Government secret service detectives. The Police also learned from MANGET that he had several times carried large quantities of the Haytian notes to one JOHN RUST, or Russ, or Bun, as he has been variously called, and had received from him in behalf of the firm employing him certain sums at the rate of $200 for 25,000 of the notes so delivered, and that on each occasion he had delivered at least 25,000 notes, representing a face value of $50,000 in gold.

Careful scrutiny of the story narrated by this man MANGET, who speaks French fluently, satisfied both Señor LAROCHE and his Vice-Consul, Mr. ELWOOD COOPER, that the facts were essentially true and correct. The detectives also felt that they were treading upon good ground, and reported their successful progress to the Police Superintendent. Mr. KENNEDY shared in the general belief that sufficient information had been gained, and directed that the case go at once before a Magistrate.

On Friday morning last, therefore, Detectives EUSTACE and FARLEY escorted the Haytian Minister to the Tombs Police Court, where his appearance made a decided sensation. Señor LAROCHE is a man of decided color, who, while possessing a commanding and refined presence, is also a gentleman of considerable literary and scholarly attainments. He was accompanied by his Secretary, also of dark complexion, and by Mr. ELWOOD COOPER an American citizen and Vice-Consul in this port, having an office at No. 132 Front-street. These gentlemen gave Justice HOGAN a brief outline of the case, and he became satisfied that he would be justified in granting a warrant for the arrest of the parties. Acting on this view of the case, Señor LAROCHE made the following affidavit and complaint:

Evariste Laroche, of St. Germain Hotel, being duly sworn, deposes and says: That he is the Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General for the Republic of Hayti to the Government of the United States, and that he has been informed that the note hereto annexed, and purporting to be a two-dollar note of the Republic of Hayti, was, with many others of like character, made and printed by Alphonse Brett, William H. H. Jones and John Rush; deponent has examined said note, and the same is false, forged and counterfeit; and he therefore charges said Brett, Jones and Rust with making and printing said note, well knowing the same to be counterfeit, and with the felonious intent to cheat and defraud, and prays that said Brett, Jones and Rust may be arrested and dealt with as the law directs.

This complaint of Minister LAROCHE was further strengthened and sustained by the following affidavit:

John A. Manget, of No. 66 Fulton-street, being duly sworn, says: That some time during the Winter of 1867-8, he was at the office of Brett & Jones, No. 89 Nassau-street, in the City of New-York, and there saw being made a number of notes similar to the one annexed to deponent's affidavit. Deponent, while in said office, had a conversation with William H. H. Jones relative to said notes, and was told by said Jones that he had authority to have said notes printed, through Colonel WOOD, a detective officer in the Government service. Deponent afterward carried a number of said notes to said RUST, and received from him, in payment therefor, an account of BURR & Co., at the rate of about $200 for every $25,000 of said notes. Deponent carried said notes to RUST on two occasions, and, to the best of his knowledge, carried about $25,000 of said notes on each occasion.

ANNEXED to these affidavits was a fac simile of the counterfeit notes, of which the following is a translated copy:

REPUBLIC OF HAYTI.
(Aires of the Republic.)

TWO DOLLARS — Vignette of President Geffrard. — 100 — 100 — Vignette of President Geffrard. — TWO DOLLARS

The Present Bill Circulates in the Republic for the Value of
TWO DOLLARS,
And the Public Treasurer Guarantees the Bearer its Value in virtue of the law of April 14, 1827.
For the Treasurer-General,
JOREF.

The three persons named in the complaint were all arrested yesterday by the detectives, when an entirely new phase of the case was developed, making it still more complex and extensive. BURR, as he was called yesterday in the Court room, made no secret of his connection with the manufacture of the counterfeits, and made a most aggravating statement in explanation of his part of the transaction. According to BURR's statement, it appears that an Admiral of the Haytian Navy, who was formerly an officer in the Confederate Navy, called upon him last Summer, and represented himself as being authorized by the Haytian Government to procure the manufacture of which $500,000 worth of two-dollar notes, for which a fair price would be paid in gold. As BURR was only an engraver, he could not enter into the manufacture himself, so he employed BRETT & JONES to print the notes thus required. He had received from the printers $400,000 worth of these notes and delivered the same to the Admiral, whose name is suppressed by those interested in the case. These notes, it is understood, were forwarded to Hayti, and are now in circulation. Messrs. BRETT & JONES corroborate such portions of the statement made by BURR as pertain to themselves, all the parties uniting in declaring that they had no idea that the currency that they were preparing was actually a counterfeit issue. The detectives succeeded also yesterday in gaining possession of $300,000 worth of the counterfeits, and paraded the entire lot in the Court room yesterday afternoon, where the prisoners were arraigned before the Magistrate.

As soon as Justice HOGAN could spare the necessary time from the routine business of the Court, he took cognizance of the case. Señor LAROCHE, through Mr. COOPER, then stated that he had every reason to believe the statements made by the prisoners, and as he merely wished to obtain sufficient evidence of a reliable character for use against those persons who had betrayed the confidence of their Government in thus procuring the wholesale manufacture of counterfeit currency, did not desire to have them further prosecuted. As the Magistrate seemed to be puzzled somewhat regarding the precise nature of the offense committed by the prisoners he decided, after due deliberation, to permit the accused to remain in the custody of the detectives until to-day, when a definite decision will be reached. In all probability the persons now under lock and key at Police Headquarters will be permitted to act as sworn witnesses for the prosecution of the principals in the Republic of Hayti, and after giving their depositions will be released from custody. That it will not fare so well with the twenty-odd persons already under arrest in Hayti is quite evident from the remarks of the Minister Resident and his Vice-Consul. The crime of counterfeiting in Hayti is one punishable with death, and the probability is that the present case will result in an extensive series of executions at no far distant day.

THE BOGERT CASE.

Wide Navy-yard Defalcation—Decisions of Judge Benedict on the Recovery Claims.

Judge BENEDICT has made the following decision relative to the case of The United States vs. ROBERT D. BOGERT, the Paymaster's Clerk, who, it may be remembered, absconded with upward of $12,000 belonging to the Government:

BENEDICT, J.—This case comes before the Court on motion for judgment on a verdict taken subject to the opinion of the Court. The action is brought in behalf of the United States against the defendant, who was a Paymaster's Clerk in the United States Navy, and a recovery claim under the provisions of the act of March 2, 1863.

This statute provides in the first section, among other things, that any person in the land or naval forces of the United States, or in the militia in actual service, who shall steal, embezzle, or knowingly and willfully misappropriate or apply to his own use or benefit any money or other property of the United States, shall be deemed guilty of a criminal offence, and shall be subject to trial and punishment by a Court-martial in the manner provided by the act. In the third section of the act, it is further provided that any person not in the military or naval forces of the United States, nor in the militia called into or actually employed in the service of the United States, who shall do or commit any of the acts prohibited in the first section, shall forfeit and pay to the United States the sum of $2,000, and in addition, double the amount of damages which the United States may have sustained by reason of the doing or committing such act, together with the costs of suit, and such forfeiture and damages shall be sued for in the same suit.

Upon the trial of the cause evidence was given on the part of the Government, showing that the defendant was a Paymaster's Clerk on board the receiving-ship Vermont, and that while acting in that capacity he converted to his own use certain moneys belonging to the United States, and the jury, under objections on the part of the defendant, were instructed to bring in a verdict for the sum of $12,000, and, in addition, double the amount of damages which they found the Government to have sustained by reason of the acts of the defendant, reserving for the opinion of the Court the question of the applicability of the third section of the act of March 2, 1863, to a person holding a position which the defendant did.

The question thus reserved, I have now considered, and am of opinion that the ruling at the trial cannot be sustained. The defendant was shown to be a Paymaster's Clerk, regularly appointed as such, and, at the time in question, in actual service on board the national ship Vermont. In this capacity he had charge of certain funds of the United States, to be used by him in payment of seamen and other persons on the pay-rolls of the navy, which he converted to his own use. Persons holding such positions are appointed by virtue of a statute providing for the organization of the navy. They are required to wear the uniform of the navy, and draw pay as part of the naval forces. They have a rank in the navy; they are compelled to bind themselves to be governed by the laws and regulations for the government of the navy, and, I cannot doubt, would be held liable to trial by Court-martial.

The third section of the act of 1863 is only applicable to persons not in the military or naval forces of the United States, and cannot be held applicable to persons who would be liable to trial by court-martial under the first section.

In the case of a Paymaster's Clerk in the army arrested for trial before a Court-martial for acts prohibited by the first section of the act of March 2, 1863, it has been held that such a person was in the military service liable to trial by a military tribunal and not entitled to be discharged on a habeas corpus (in matter of JOHN THOMAS—Hill, J. United States District Court for Southern District of Mississippi—1 Chicago legal news—page 345)—I can see no ground for a distinction between the army and the navy in regard to the status of this officer, and must hold that the defendant was in the naval forces of the United States, liable to trial by Court-martial as such. If the defendant was in the naval forces he is not liable to the penalties prescribed by the third section of the act of March 2, 1863, and the verdict therefore being for $2,000, and in addition double the amount of damages proved, according to the provisions of the third section of that act, does not warrant judgment for the amount.

There must accordingly be a new trial, unless the Government consent to reduce the verdict to the amount of actual damages as proved. If this reduction be made, I see no reason at present why judgment for that amount should not be rendered against the defendant. But I will hear counsel upon this point, if so desired, upon the settlement of the order to be entered on this decision.

The Alleged Suicide—Inquest by the Coroner and Verdict of the Jury.

Coroner ROLLINS held an inquest yesterday over the remains of ISAAC E. ALLEN, the young man who committed suicide in Nineteenth-street on Friday night, as already reported in the TIMES. The evidence in the case presented but few facts in addition to those already made public. It appears that the deceased was a native of Jersey City, and had been for some time out of employment, a circumstance which naturally greatly depressed him in spirits. He had only a few days ago been promised a situation as clerk, and was considerably elated at the prospect of comfortably supporting his young wife and child. The situation was, however, given to another, and the revulsion of mind was a terrible one. On Friday morning his wife discovered that he had a pistol in his possession, and as he had frequently spoken of suicide as a means of escape from the vexations of this life, she became alarmed and inquired where he had obtained it. He said that he had taken the weapon in the way of a joke from a friend named JOHN WATERS, and faithfully promised her to return it that same day. About 8 o'clock he took a tender and loving leave of his little family, and started out with the intention of going to his father's place of business in Jersey City. The next his wife heard of her husband was that he had committed suicide. The jury rendered a verdict in accordance with the facts, and the remains of the unfortunate young man were handed over to his relatives. This is one of the saddest cases of suicide in the long list accumulated in the Coroners' books during the past few months.

The Loyal Legion.

At the Congress of this Order held in Philadelphia in April, an election for Orator and Poet for the public exercises at the next Congress in 1870, resulted in the choice of Major-General CHARLES DEVENS, delegate from the Massachusetts Commandery, as Orator, and Major JAMES H. CAMPBELL, of the Pennsylvania Commandery, as alternate; and of Brevet Brigadier-General HORACE BINNEY SARGENT, delegate from the Maine Commandery, as Poet, and of Brevet Colonel HORATIO C. KING, delegate from the New-York Commandery, as alternate.

Sale of the Steamer Memphis.

The Memphis, a screw propeller, bark rigged, of 791 tons burden and carrying one gun, was sold by auction at the Brooklyn Navy-yard yesterday mornin for $66,300, Mr. J. H. BROWN, of No. 68 South-street, this City, becoming the purchaser, after some very animated bidding by shipping merchants. Admiral GODON ordered the sale, in accordance with instructions from the Navy Department. It was conducted by Messrs. PRESSEL & CO., of Hanover-square. The terms of purchase were $5,000 cash, and the balance within ten days, subsequent to which the vessel must be removed. The Memphis was formerly engaged in the Confederate blockade-running, and was captured off Charleston in 1863 by the U. S. gunboat Magnolia, with a cargo of cotton on board. She was appraised at $70,000 at the time, and used as a gunboat to convey supplies to the Atlantic and Gulf blockading fleet. She was eventually, in 1865, laid up in ordinary, where she has since remained.

THE SOCIAL EVIL.

Lecture on the Subject by Dr. Charlotte Lozier.

A lecture upon the "Social Evil" was given yesterday afternoon, at the Woman's Medical College, corner of Twelfth-street and Second-avenue, by Dr. CHARLOTTE LOZIER, before a large number of ladies. She touched upon the terrible results that often ensued from the iniquity of society, and then remarked that one child in eight during 1868, was known to have been born dead, while the births of a vast number were known to have been criminally concealed. The crime has worked its retribution in the steady decrease of American population. Under no circumstances whatever could infanticide be justified, except when it was to save the life of the mother. The cause of the social evil, the speaker said, was ignorance. It was directly the cause, on account of woman having ever been denied an equal education with man, and indirectly on account of the neglect or refusal on the part of man to allow her personal and spiritual being a full expansion. Ignorance began in our methods of education. The young were taught everything in physics and ethics, except a knowledge of themselves. They were ignorant of the structure and functions of their organisms, and if sick, dark, sleep and dressed in a manner that was simply suicidal. Ignorant of the high moral nature of the sexual relation, they were driven to commercialize companions or impure literature, to gratify an interest which, in itself, was not evil. The sacred wedding of the soul to the, once consecrated in youth, was not easily canceled in after life. Dress in women, it was stated, often through tight lacing upon the most vital organs, prevented the movements necessary to healthful digestion, respiration, circulation and reproduction. The last function suffered the most. The nerves were exasperated by the heat and dragging weight of the skirts, and girls were ushered into womanhood with a costume in every way deleterious, and conducive to prostitution in innumerable instances by the creation of local conditions and excitement. Dirt, it was said, promoted immorality, through insufficient nourishment and a consequent imperfect digestion, and also through plethora induced by rich sauces and alcoholic stimulants. Depraved music and costumes suggestive of exposure also had their due effect in causing a lapse from virtue. A life of luxury and ease, by not exercising the muscular forces, caused an inordinate awakening of the sexual function. On the other hand, certain labors, such as working a sewing machine, unduly exercised the muscles of the pelvis and lower limbs, and aggravated the tendencies created by improper dress and diet. The lecturer then deplored the insufficient education of women to earn an abundant living as being a means of their downfall. Dress, she said, in one respect, was the cause of a lapse of women from virtue, and, in another of deep injury to their motherhood through its tight ligatures and dragging weights. The Church erred whenever it conceded woman's accountability to God without affording her equal opportunity to prepare for His presence. The Legislature should seek means of preventing the social evil, and, until it became eradicated, should protect the public against its ravages by a proper education of the young. Medical colleges should be endowed for women, as well as men. The lives of drivelling idiots were constantly withdrawn by society from the latter, and they consequently turned and rended it. Legislation could not abolish the social evil, but a medical supervision of those connected with it should exist. It should impose the same penalties for infanticide as for the murder of an adult. This century, the speaker said, was characterized by such social abuses, that their very enormity would doubtless secure their abolishment.

THE BILLIARD TOURNAMENT.

Tie Games Between Rudolphe, Foster and Snyder.

FOSTER, SNYDER and RUDOLPHE having each won four games and lost two, it became necessary, in order to determine who should receive the second, third and fourth prizes, for them to play again. SNYDER and RUDOLPHE contested yesterday afternoon, and FOSTER and RUDOLPHE at night. The game between the first two was rather uninteresting, sixty-four innings being exhausted in making the required 1,500 points. SNYDER, having caught a severe cold while playing DANIELS on Wednesday last, was in no mood to do his known skill justice, and RUDOLPHE had virtually no one to oppose. SNYDER made no run above 69, and RUDOLPHE but one of triple figures and that 139. The winner's majority was 268, and his average 16⅞.

There was nothing lacking to impart interest to the contest at night between RUDOLPHE and FOSTER. The latter disposed of his extremely forbearing with RUDOLPHE, and he received the Hon's share of applause; but even this did not deter him from repudiating the referee's decision in one instance, and in another angrily throwing his ball on to the table and disturbing the others while FOSTER was operating on the table. The playing was excellent on both sides. RUDOLPHE made runs of 186, 109, 102 again, 130 and 93. It was not until the forty-sixth inning that FOSTER got above 84, his run then being 109; yet, by counting steadily, he managed to ride to MCKEEVER's skirts, and for three hours the result of the contest was a matter of grave doubt. At last RUDOLPHE secured a lead of 199, and, as he had but 94 to go, the chances were decidedly in his favor. It was now that FOSTER got in his run of 106, and the excitement increased to a high pitch. This run, only one in which FOSTER nursed the balls anything like himself, proved, however, of no service to him, as in eight more innings his antagonist scored game, and averaging 23¼, winning by 109. All things considered, RUDOLPHE's execution in this game surpassed his best previous performance in the tournament. The result gives him the second prize, $355, and twenty per cent. of the net receipts.

On Monday afternoon FOSTER and SNYDER will play off for third and fourth prizes, and at night MCKEEVER and CYRILLE DION are to contend at the French game for $250 a side.

The summary below shows the games won and lost, and also the best runs and averages. RUDOLPHE made the greatest number of points in the tournament, and DERBY the best general average.

CRICKET.

The Willow Club.

The match between the married and single members of this club took place yesterday, on their grounds at Bedford, Brooklyn, and after a game of one inning on each side, the bachelors came off the victors by a score of 87 to 64. HUTCHINGS led the score at the bat on the winning side with 22, MORRISON carrying his bat out for 11—CLERKHUGH and GIBSON also scoring double figures. On the married side STEVENSON led the score with 15, LANKAN getting 12. After the game was over the members of the club sat down to a good dinner at the club-house.

Reported Conspiracy to Assassinate James Fisk, Jr.

Yesterday morning, Superintendent KENNEDY received the following letter from England, which we publish for what it may be worth:

LANCASHIRE, Eng., April 24, 1869.

SIR: Will you be kind enough to put Mr. FISK and others, the directors and managers of the Erie Railway Company, on their guard? There have been several private meetings of shareholders in the Erie here, who have been swindled out of considerable sums of money by said Erie directors, and they have come to an understanding—a serious one, by the way—of dispensing with the principal "thieves," as they call them, in the Erie Company. Now I beg you will keep a lookout for all boats arriving at New-York during the next few weeks.

The modus operandi of the "Deputation," as they are termed, is, I believe, quite an original plan of dispatching hated and unpopular persons, and I may say that it will require the greatest care to discover the persons who are engaged or are to be engaged to do the job.

I may say that Mr. FISK is specially pointed out. He is considered in England a madman; and it is considered not only unwise, but fearfully unsafe, to place such a coxcomb in any power over other people's property. They say: "Just fancy such an idiot being a director of a railway, should-be-public railway, being lessee of theatres and operas!"

They look upon this conglomeration of things as sufficient proof of the poor man's idiocy. At the same time he is to be dispatched.

My reason for making this known to you is purely from motives of humanity.

Yours, respectfully, M. W. F.

Suspected Murderers Discharged.

It will be recollected that the body of an infant, sewed up in a bag, was found in a pond recently, in the vicinity of Peekskill, and that a colored man and white woman were arrested on suspicion of having thrown it there. The Coroner's inquest over the body developed nothing which would justify the detention of the parties arrested, and they were accordingly discharged. The woman claiming to be the mother made contradictory statements concerning the affair, and the physicians called to aid in the inquest gave it as their opinion that she had not given birth to a child. The jury therefore gave a verdict that the child came to its death by some means unknown to the jurors.

RIOT IN HUDSON CITY.

Serious Affray Between a Party of English Miners and a Company of Irishmen—One Man Mortally Wounded, and Others Severely Injured—Arrests by the Police.

A serious riot occurred last evening at West End, Hudson City, between some English miners and a mob of Irishmen, in which a number of persons were injured by shooting and otherwise, one and perhaps two of whom are fatally wounded. The riot occurred at the public house of HORATIO HOWARD, a large contractor, who is at present engaged in blasting out the rock on Grand-avenue, for which purpose he has in his employ from thirty-six to forty English miners, who board at his house. It appears from the affidavit subsequently made before Recorder ALDRIDGE by Mr. HOWARD, that he returned home from South Bergen between 6 and 7 o'clock last evening. He found there three men at the time unknown to him, but whose names he subsequently ascertained to be WILLIAM NOLAN and his two sons, WILLIAM and PATRICK. They called for drinks, and Mr. HOWARD refused them, as they appeared to be disorderly. The NOLANS declared that they would have drinks, and Mr. HOWARD replied that he "guessed he was boss, and they could have nothing." They then became still more disorderly, and challenged any one in the house to fight for pay. Mr. H. endeavored to get them away peaceably, but they continued talking about fighting until finally he and one of his miners named JOHN CODE got them outside of the door, when they attempted to reenter, but were kept out. CODE and one of the NOLANS then had a fight, and in the meantime the other two ran away. In about twenty minutes Mr. HOWARD saw a large mob coming over the hill, and remarking that he feared there was going to be trouble, put up the window-shutters and bolted the door. This had hardly been accomplished when the mob came up, and some of the ringleaders commenced a violent attack on the house, tearing down the shutters and smashing out the windows. While this destruction was progressing, CODE went out and procured his revolver, and, returning, fired two shots through the window. Mr. HOWARD, fearing that his house was about to be demolished, started off for the Police, and CODE also went out and ran off in another direction, followed by the infuriated mob. While being pursued he turned and fired the remaining shots in his revolver, but was finally overtaken and beaten and kicked until he was left for dead on the ground. About this time Officers GALLAGHER, TARK, TUBBY and others arrived upon the scene, when the mob mostly dispersed.

The Police arrested the following-named persons, all miners, and conveyed them to prison: Richard Minor, Joseph Robinson, James Farra, William Blight, William Wells, Herbert Hyman, Michael Woolcock, Arthur Martin, Douglass Hadden, Ezra Howard, William Francis, William Bennett, Benjamin Blewatt, James Code, John Fregonner, and Mrs. John Code and Jane Thomas.

About 9:30 o'clock JOHN CODE, who was almost helpless from the injuries sustained, was brought in by two policemen. The Recorder, after hearing the affidavit, admitted all the prisoners to bail except J. CODE, who fired the shots, and also issued a warrant for the arrest of the three NOLANS. Among the injured was WILLIAM NOLAN, JR., who was shot through the abdomen, and will undoubtedly die; WILLIAM NOLAN, Sr., who received a severe stab-wound back of the left ear and down the neck; PHILIP GILLIGAN, alias "Dutch Phil," shot through the arm, and PATRICK NOLAN, who was severely injured about the head. CODE's head and face presented a most shocking appearance, being covered with gashes and bruises, and he also sustained severe bodily injuries, which may prove fatal.

The affair created intense excitement in Hudson City, and during the preliminary examination, a large crowd of people were assembled in and outside of the Court-room.

A further examination will take place before Recorder ALDRIDGE on Monday.

THE TRADES.

Meeting of the Printers' Co-operative Society took place last evening at No. 68 East Broadway, WM. EAGEN, the temporary President, being in the chair. The report of the Secretary stated that upon 1,500 shares of the 1,748 taken, the first installment of $1 had been paid in, and that as soon as the entire 2,000 shares were subscribed for and the first installment received, a second installment would be called, and practical operations at once be initiated. Offices in excellent condition, it was stated, could be bought cheap at second hand, and the Society, it was hoped, would soon, like the Cooperative Printers, at No. 148 William-street, demonstrate that it was easily practicable for journeymen to appropriate to themselves, in addition to their wages, the snug profits hitherto enjoyed by employers. At the close of the report, additional installments of $1 were paid by those who had previously taken shares, and new members were admitted, who also paid their initiatory dollar. The amount, therefore, swelled to installments upon 1,400 shares. The President suggested that the next meeting should be upon the 23d inst., and urged that by that time the payments upon the 600 shares should be made, in order that there should be no further delay in commencing operations. He would therefore recommend that a committee be appointed to canvass for subscribers until the desired amount should have been received. This was decided on. It was also agreed that the next meeting should be upon the evening of Saturday, 22d inst. An adjournment then took place.

The Central Park.

Every day, almost every hour, adds new beauties to those already existing in the Park. Every day the lawns become greener, softer and more velvety, while the trees and shrubs put forth a denser and brighter verdure. Within the past month a large amount of work has been done in the Park. Pruning, digging, weeding, the relaying of walks and drives, and the clearing up of the leaves and rotten wood left by the Winter storms have been going on constantly. Flocks of sheep are grazing on the lawns, and the mowers are constantly at work keeping down the rank growth of young grass.

At the Eighth-avenue and Broadway entrance the drive is being widened, and its curve somewhat altered. The low ground on the right is also being filled up. This is intended to be one of the principal entrances to the Park, and doubtless when the plans of the Commissioners are fully carried out it will present an aspect worthy of our beautiful pleasure ground, which it certainly does not at present.

The boats have been got out and have been doing a tolerably good business, but until overcoats can be dispensed with and umbrellas left at home, water parties are not likely to be of very frequent occurrence.

The pavilion for the sale of mineral waters has been repainted with a coat of divers colors. Its interior arrangements have also been altered, the rock work and creeping plants having been dispensed with, and the bar moved to the centre of the building. The pavilion is prettily situated, and is a noticeable and attractive object in the landscape, as it stands on the edge of a fine lawn, and is backed by the lake and woods beyond.

The grand fountains near the lake, and the alcove beneath the terrace, will probably be finished this season. The structure on Observatory Hill will also be finished some time or other, but when it is impossible to say. Beyond these we do not hear of anything particularly new contemplated by the Park Commissioners this season.

A large number of persons visited the Park yesterday in spite of the threatened storm. The velocipedists were out in strong force. A sort of velocipede livery-stable has been established at the Seventh-avenue entrance to the Park, where velocipedes of all kinds can be hired for a moderate amount per hour.

Accidents Yesterday.

The following accidents occurred last evening: DANIEL REED, aged 8, of No. 752 Second-avenue, was run over near his residence by a truck, and was dangerously if not fatally injured. The driver, JOHN ECKENFELDER, was arrested.

MARY HERON, aged 45, of No. 65 Mulberry-street, fell down a flight of stairs and dislocated her left thigh.

PATRICK SWEENEY, of No. 116 Chrystie-street, fell off a Third-avenue car and fractured a leg.

PATRICK MCDERMOTT fell from an ash cart in Stanton-street and fractured a leg.

The Dunnigan Homicide.

Coroner JONES resumed the inquest on the body of JAMES DUNNIGAN, the man who died from injuries received at the Navy-street fracas last Sunday night, last evening. The witnesses examined were BRIDGET CARLEY, CATHARINE O'NEIL, NORAH O'NEIL and EDWARD MURRAY. Beyond the fact that EDWARD MURRAY had heard pistols fired at the time in question, and had seen some man with a club, and another with a knife; had lived in the neighborhood for some twenty years, but knew nobody except KILMEAD, a man who was wounded on the occasion, and the fact stated by Mrs. O'NEIL that her husband struck some man on the head with a club but she could not tell who, there was no testimony adduced of any importance.

Manslaughter in Newark.

An inquest was held last evening, in Newark, on the body of PATRICK MCGUIRK, who was fatally injured a few days since by a man named STORMS, who struck him on the head, during a fight, with a two-pound weight. The jury found a verdict of manslaughter against STORMS, who has been committed for trial.

Another Stabbing Case.

FRANCIS TRADNOR, of No. 200 West Houston-street, quarreled with JOHN ROLAND, of No. 35 Greenwich-street, last evening, at the corner of Fourth-street and Charles-street. ROLAND stabbed his opponent in the side and escaped. The wound is not considered dangerous.
